BOSTON VICIOUS AND HYPOCRITICAL, SAYS PLAYWRIGHT

Eugene Walter, the playwright and author of "The Easiest Way," which Mayor Fitzgerald drove out of Boston after four performances had been given at the Hollis Street Theatre, sent a letter to-day to the Mayor, in which he scored him unmercifully for his action and held Boston up as one of the wickedest cities in the United States.

Here are some of the statements made by Mr. Walter in his letter:

"You take the reputation of a man (David Belasco), who has builded it more carefully and longer than you have your own, and you endeavor to place him on the level of a common seducer of public morals.

"You condemn Miss Frances Starr and her associates as accessories before and after the fact in an effort to debauch public taste and morals and American art.

"Boston divides the reputation of being the centre of culture and the centre of illiteracy and vice in the United States.

"The Common has been turned into a pasture for the exploitation of sexual perverts and soliciting prostitutes.

"In no place in the United States is the social crime so rampant as in your own city.

"I know conditions in Boston, because I have personally seen them.

"An echo of Boston's vice reaches the very uttermost limits of Alaska and the furthermost corners of Southern California.

"The country at large suffers from the exodus of prostitution, thievery and crime that spreads its contagion from your centre of culture to the furthermost corners of the United States."

This is the letter in full:

ATTACKS THE MORALS OF BOSTON.

New York, March 24, 1911.

Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, Boston, Mass.

Sir—I take the liberty of mailing you under separate cover, a printed copy of the play entitled "The Easiest Way," of which I am the author, and which by your order censored in by your police commissioner was denied the right of public presentation at the Hollis Street Theatre, and terminated its engagement on Wednesday night.

Before entering into an explanation as to why I should send you this printed copy of the play, I take it that I have the right to express my regret that I should not have been notified, either by yourself or others, that official objection had been made to the character of this drama, and that it was not my privilege to personally appear before you or or make what I might conceive to be a defence against the ridiculous charge of immoral influence contained in your order denying me the right to give this play before the Boston public.

It is true that my management was represented, but Mr. David Belasco, from whom no other producer or representative of the American drama stands higher in the world, was compelled to be with his sick daughter in North Carolina and I, myself, was taken wholly unaware. To say that we were utterly unprepared for your direct attack upon the subject matter of this play is only to say that it has played every principal city of the United States without question and with the positive compliment and encouragement of press, public and literati, and that at this late date we did not anticipate opposition in a city which rightfully or wrongfully has posed as the intellectual centre of this country.

It is true that the Mayor of Richmond, Va., without having seen or known of the real character of the play, read it or conversed with those who had seen or read it, barred its presentation there, and I can only dismiss his criticism by saying that Richmond will with great difficulty establish its moral standard as immaculate when it has explained its vast population of mulattoes. But the Mayor of Richmond seems to have acted against the play precisely in the same way that you and your commissioner have proceeded without personal knowledge or intimacy, and perhaps purely "or spectacular effect.

You have neither seen it, nor read it. It played four performances in your city, and, indeed, if your duties as Mayor are so demanding upon your time that you cannot spare the time to see "The Easiest Way," those same duties should be so imperative that you could scarce take the time for discussion or debate to suppress this play, when you are confronted by the social conditions of your own city, of which you must be cognizant, and which you, as a man, decent and law-abiding citizen could not abide unless you are a coordinate part of a criminal system which operates practically unmolested in this "centre of culture"—the "Hub of intellectuality," somewhat smeared with the dying mud from its spokes.

Defends Belasco.

It is not, however, my purpose to attack your administration because you have suppressed my work. I am not here as a critic, but rather as a supplicant. You have denounced, and caused to be suppressed a work in that involves the best efforts of some of the leading spirits in the American drama. I need not call your attention to Mr. David Belasco and tell you that when you designate a citizen

VESSEL AFIRE IN HEAVY GALE

EUREKA, Cal., March 25.—An oceangoing steamer is afire off Humboldt Bay, north of here. It is believed to be the Quinal of the Hartwood line.

Life savers were rushed from coast stations to-day to aid the burning ship. Through the night several attempts were made to launch lifeboats, all of which were unsuccessful on account of the gale that was raging.

Life savers report that the passengers and crew are safe, having put off in small boats. The ship is believed to be doomed.

TWO STEAMSHIPS SUNK; 49 SAVED

NEW HAVEN, England, March 25.—The British steamer Irishman and the French vessel Ville de Bordeaux were sunk in a collision in the English channel before Newhaven to-day. The crew of both vessels, forty-nine in number, were saved.

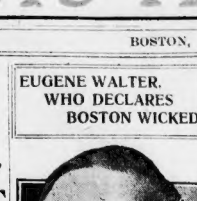
ACCUSE THREE MEN OF ROBBING DOCTOR

Walter B. Phinney, Bert M. Chapman and Michael Cooney were arraigned in the Police Court in Lynn on the charge of stealing a diamond stickpin, a small amount of money and several bottles of medicine from Dr. Edward E. Bray, superintendent of the Lynn Emergency Hospital, while he was at the Hotel Oxford. The police said they found the diamond pin sticking in a chair on which Phinney had been sitting when he was arrested.

AMERICAN BREAKS A BRITISH RECORD

LONDON, March 25.—The British hammer throwing record was broken today by an American. C. E. Putnam of Kansas, representing Oxford in the intervarsity meet, set up a new mark with a throw of 168 feet and 8 inches.

EUGENE WALTER, WHO DECLARES BOSTON WICKED



FIRE DESTROYS FAMOUS SCHOOL

Rock Ridge Hall, in Cliff Road, Wellesley Hills, the main building of one of the most exclusive preparatory schools of the same name for boys in the world, was destroyed by fire to-day, the fire starting while the school was in session.

Some of the books and school paraphernalia on the first floor were rescued by students and teachers. Everything on the second and third floors was burned. The damage was estimated at $50,000.

Lack of fire fighting apparatus was responsible for the fire getting such headway before competent help arrived from Newton.

The blaze was very spectacular and the greatest excitement pervailed while great tongues of flame shot from the roof and the sixty boys, assisted by scores of men and women of the neighborhood, dashed wildly about in an effort to get out of the burning building some of the belongings of the students.

Masters Help Boys Out.

Dr. George H. White who has been at the head of the school for two years and R. E. Hyther, one of the masters, helped get the boys out of the burning building.

Miss Lillian O'Donnell, a maid employed in the school, went to the attic and found it in flames. Ralph Fowler, a student, telephoned for the fire department and the alarm was sounded through the school. This was at 9:20 o'clock.

With the sound of the fire gong the boys got to work with the school fire fighting apparatus. A line of hose was run through the building and into the attic. From there the boys scrambled onto the roof and began to direct a stream where the flames were breaking through next to the main chimney.

Wood's Nephew Sound Alarm.

In the meantime Stanley Wood, nephew of Major-General Leonard A. Wood, U. S. A., sounded the alarm from Box No. 214. Chief Diehl of the Wellesley department sounded two others when he arrived and also telephoned to Newton for a steamer.

The Newton steamer had difficulty in getting up steam and by the time this had been done the upper part of the building was burned. The flames ate their way down from the top to the first floor.

Stanley Wood was cut on the head. He was in his room trying to get his clothing together when a piece of the chimney fell and cut his head. He was but slightly injured.

Walter McKenzie, a mechanic, had his hand severely cut when he broke the window in the basement in trying to get at the hose.

Studies Will Go On.

The building destroyed was occupied by sons of wealthy people. Among the most prominent were: Hiram Bicker, Jr. and his brother Charles L., sons of Hiram Bicker, the Poland Spring man; J. R. W. Johnson of Missouri, D. E. Felt of Tacoma, Wash. R. L. S. Powder of Cheyenne, M. Royal Gannon, J. A. McMullins and J. A. Gilman of Honolulu, and J. A. Zinn, son of a Boston florist.

The burning of Rock Ridge Hall will not interfere with the studies of the boys, as Recitation and Hawthorne Halls were untouched and recitations will be held in these buildings on Monday next.

The building will be rebuilt at once. The students were to have begun their Spring vacation next week. The building was fully insured.

Students were at the school from all parts of the world, one boy coming from Spain, another from Mexico, a third from Honolulu and pretty every State in the union was represented.

An immense crowd gathered, including many girls. They were all eager to help the boys save their property and the teachers had their hands full trying to keep the young people from imperiling their lives by entering the burning structure.

MINISTER RIVERO COMING.

BANDIT SHOT BY PURSUER

All of the police force of Lynn, armed and ready to shoot to kill, began a search early to-day for two bandits who broke into one of the buildings of the Judkins Ice Company, on Wells avenue, and with whom John J. Middleton, superintendent of the ice company, exchanged a score of shots.

The Boston police were notified that the bandits may have come to this city and are on the lookout for them.

One of the bandits was hit and it is believed severely wounded. A bullet from one of their weapons cut a hole in one of the sleeves of Mr. Middleton's coat.

The fugitives were trailed by blood stains to a clump of woods between Lynn and Salem. It is thought the two men are in the woods.

If they are not in the woods, the police say, they may have caught a Western express car and made their way into Boston.

Mr. Middleton had a thrilling pistol battle with the two men and showed great bravery in following them for half a mile or more in an attempt to capture them single-handed.

When he finally lost sight of them he telephoned the police and a squad hurried to the woods in an automobile while the entire force was ordered to join in the man hunt. Among the men assigned directly to the chase were Inspectors Fitzgerald and Murray and Patrolmen Burrill, Sauiwick and Berry.

Mr. Middleton gave the police as good a description of the two men as he could. It was as follows:

Describes the Bandits.

Bandit No. 1.—Height 5 feet 11 inches, dress, light overcoat, mixed suit, brown derby hat; dark hair and complexion. Had appearance of well-dressed man.

Bandit No. 2.—Shorter than No. 1; dressed in black clothing and wore a black cap.

Mr. Middleton lives at No. 596 Easton avenue. He told this story of his discovery and struggle with the bandits:

"I was out late last night helping do degree work in my lodge of the Knights of Pythias. I got home somewhere about 1 o'clock in the morning. Along about 4 o'clock I was wakened by my dog barking.

"I looked out and saw a light in the blacksmith shop and stable which is a part of the ice company's buildings. The shop is about 50 feet from my house. I got up, slipped on part of my clothing and my shoes, not stopping to tie the shoes, and went out to the blacksmith shop. I carried my revolver, in which there was four cartridges.

Met Threat to Shoot.

"When I got to the shop and looked in I saw two men. One of them had an oil can in his hand and I afterwards found the whole place had been saturated with oil.

"'What are you doing there?' I cried.

"'Go back or I'll shoot,' one of the bandits replied.

"'You throw up your hands or I'll shoot to kill,' I replied, and I pointed my weapon in their direction.

"One of the bandits blazed away at me and a bullet whizzed by my face. Then I opened fire on them. They dashed out of the place and ran on the avenue toward the Salem square woods. I followed them.

"When they got to what is known as Wood's road the men stopped and covered me with their weapons. I told them again to halt and threw up their hands or I would shoot. They replied by firing at me and I returned the fire. One of the men cried out in a voice of anguish:

Wounded Man's Cry.

"'Oh-h, my God! oh-h-h-h!'

"I knew then that one of my shots had taken effect. The man hurried on, one of them limping.

"I went home and loaded up my revolver and later went out in search of the men a second time. I caught sight of two men in the woods and one of them was limping. I am sure they were the same men. They disappeared and I called the police and told them what had happened."

F. L. Judkins, one of the owners of the ice company, said that the bandits might have been trying to burn up the place. There was an incendiary fire there not long ago.

Another suggestion was that the two men intended to break into the office under the impression that the money for the weekly pay roll was in the safe.

MERCURY IS JAILED BECAUSE OF DAVIE

RIO JANEIRO, March 25.—The American named Mercury who arrived here and demanded that Robert E. Davie, the Boston broker, charged with embezzlement, be turned over to him for extradition, and assaulted the chief of police when his demand was refused, is sharing a cell in the lock-up with Davie. It is said Mercury once was in the United States consular service.

ARGUE SHORT AND LONG HAUL RATES

WASHINGTON, March 25.—The Interstate Commerce Commission to-day heard arguments as to the application of the long and short haul clause of the interstate commerce act on coasting traffic west of the Mississippi river. Nearly all the freight rates on intermountain as well as trans continental traffic are inverted.

Who Promised Immunity to the Shaw Trustees!

It was Chairman Sullivan who brought the executer's check for the general conscience fund to the Mayor's office on Thursday, and one of the reports generally credited in political circles is the check was paid with the distinct understanding there SHOULD BE NO CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST THE TRUSTEES OF THE SHAW ESTATE.—From the Journal to-day.

Incredible! Who made such promise, and by what authority did he do it? The law should take its course in this monstrous case, no matter who has to suffer!

TAX CASE TAKEN UP BY PELLETIER

District Attorney Pelletier to-day took up the active work of investigating the affairs of the executors of the estate of Quincy A. Shaw in dodging taxes on the estate. These trustees are Quincy A. Shaw, son of the late Robert Gilmander; Robert F. Derrick and Francis C. Welch.

Mr. Pelletier said to-day:

"We have received the papers in the case and are investigating it. As to the report in a morning paper that immunity was promised the trustees if they would hand over the money, I can say that no immunity, so far as this office is concerned, has been promised anyone.

"The Boston Stock Exchange is also investigating the question, as Welch and Herrick are prominent Boston lawyers and members of the Association.

Taken Up Copley Square Case.

The law declares that every administrator shall make under oath a true inventory of any property under his care.

The trustees of the Shaw estate declare that they did not turn in a full inventory for a number of personal and family reasons which they have made public. They returned a total of $4,250,000 to the State.

Mayor Fitzgerald to-day took up the investigation of just how much money the Copley Square property is worth to the city in taxes. This association of Boston real estate men owns the great Park square property on the corner of Arlington and Stuart street to it. City Hall experts declare that this trust has owed the city back taxes since 1902.

A remarkable story in circulation to-day at City Hall concerns the actual handing over of the money from the Shaw estate executors to the city's treasurer. John A. Sullivan of the Finance Commission brought the check to the Mayor's office and Thomas Kenny, the city's treasurer, paid it with the understanding on the part of the executors of the Shaw estate that there would be no prosecutions of them. Friends of the Mayor denied the story to-day.

Mayor Talks of Prosecution.

"If this efforts were a thousandth part as vindictive as some others it would put the parties concerned in the Shaw case where some people wants to put me this day by last summer's," said the Mayor.

The Mayor suggested that the money could be used to relieve the present high tension of Arlington street and in opening up the Park square property for commercial development, on the purchase price grounds or the erection of municipal buildings.

The Street Commissioners informed the Mayor that it will cost approximately $800,000 to extend Arlington street through the property owned by the Park Square Trust.

At the meeting of the City Council next Monday Councilman Attridge will introduce an order calling on Finance Commission to explain just why the money for

WELLESLEY COLLEGE MEASURE IS SIGNED

Governor Foss signed the bill authorizing Wellesley College to hold additional real and personal estate not exceeding $10,000,000. In all he affixed his signature to nearly one bill. It was the busiest Saturday that he has had, as far as signing bills are concerned, since he took office. Some of the bills which he signed was introduced by William B. Lawrence, and provides a penalty of a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both fine and imprisonment for any person who willfully makes a false report to a state commission.

JANONIS ARRESTED ON DEATH CHARGE

EASTHAMPTON, March 25.—Felix Janonis, wanted for the murder of Frank Tonsel, was arrested at Baldwinville, near here to-day, by State Officers Bly and McKay. The fugitive and his alleged accomplices Poles and the State Police had Polish colonies searched all over the State. The New Bedford police got possession of a postcard Janonis sent to a friend in the South End of New Bedford, and by it were able to give the State Police the information which enabled them to find the fugitive.

10 BODIES RECOVERED; MANY HURT

ATLANTA, Ga., March 25.—The Dixie Flyer on the Atlantic Seacoast line was wrecked near Ocilla, Ga., at 5 o'clock to-day, with heavy loss of life. Five hours after the disaster occurred ten bodies had been removed from the wreckage. At that time it was believed that at least thirty persons had been hurt.

The wreck occurred where the railroad crosses the Allapaha River, several miles south of Ocilla, and some of the cars plunged through the bridge and were covered by the water. It is feared that many have been drowned in these cars.

WRECKED TRAIN WAS OUT OF CHICAGO.

The bodies which have thus far been taken out were from the cars which were derailed and smashed. Among the known dead are conductor Parnell and the fireman of the train.

Nine coaches left the rails five of them being badly smashed, the other four plunging into the stream.

Immediately following the news of the disaster physicians were rushed forward. From Tifton and Savannah doctors, nurses and medical supplies were rushed to the scene.

The Dixie flyer was en route from Chicago to Jacksonville, Fla.

The scene of the wreck is fifteen miles east of Tifton and there the first news of the accident was discovered. Engineer Gibson and eight others taken from the wreckage were found to be dead. Fifteen more are seriously injured. The body of the conductor has not been found.

The coaches in the river are under ten feet of water according to reports.

The loss of life was largely in the forward coaches of the train. The locomotive dragged through the bridge, carrying the foremost cars with it.

Many Tourists on Board.

The Dixie Flyer is one of the crack trains of the Atlantic coast line, and is run for the benefit of tourists to the Southern points. At this season of the year it usually carries a large number of passengers.

The Dixie Flyer left Atlanta last night at 8:00 o'clock. The train runs from Atlanta to Macon over the Central of Georgia tracks, then over the Georgia Southern & Florida to Tifton, where it goes on to the tracks of the Atlantic coast line to Jacksonville.

As the locomotive left the bridge the engineer, Eugene Greene, and his fireman, seized for their lives into the water below. The engine struck a deep spotting basin and was killed, but the engineer struck the water and was saved with a few minor bruises.

Few if any of those in the sleeping cars had left their berths when the wreck occurred. The heat in the coaches when they left Atlanta was stifling and many sat in the trainmen's chamber of the cars in a trap inside to fight their way from the compartments. A number of these are said to be dead.

As fast as they could be made up other relief trains were sent out from Macon and Savannah.

TWO MORE TRAINMEN SHOT IN STRIKE ZONE

LEXINGTON, Ky., March 25.—The strike on the Queen & Crescent has resulted in a condition akin to anarchy in the mountains. Two engineers were shot last night, one at Hoblidus, Tenn., and another at King's Mountain, Ky. Both were taken to the hospital at Somerset. Jr. Robbins a pitched battle took place between strike sympathizers and the deputies at Eagle No. 2, driven by William O'Donnell, who was shot through the knee. When the train pulled in it was surrounded by armed men who were ordered away by the deputies. A battle ensued in which fifty or more shots were fired. One detective received a flesh wound in the shoulder from the strikers and detective quit. Engineer Frank O'Connor on the local freight to Somerset was shot in the hip when men on both sides of the train opened fire.

MAKE PLANS FOR VAUDEVILLE STRIKE

NEW YORK, March 25.—Preparations for a strike in the vaudeville world that has been rumored for some time assumed tangible shape when the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association, of which E. Z. Albee, general manager of the B. F. Keith interests, is the head, held a meeting and took in sixty new members among about 300 theatres and including not only vaudeville, but the two big burlesque syndicates.

The activity is caused, it is said, in view of a proposed strike of the Vaudeville Actors' Association, known as the White Rats.

W. C. RUSSELL FILES ANSWER

William C. Russell of Melrose did his answer to the petition of Daniel Blake (Dakota Dan) Russell, in the Land Court-bridge Court, that the court interpret the meaning of the late Senator Daniel Russell's will.

It is set forth by William C. Russell that inasmuch as the petitioner, Daniel Blake "Dakota Dan" is not the son of the late Senator Russell, so Dakota Dan, has no right to ask the court for a construction of the will or to participate in the estate in any way. The petition filed by Dakota Dan Russell asking for an interpretation of the will was an effort to reopen the famous contest. The petition filed by William C. Russell is as follows:

Denies He Is Son.

"William C. Russell, the respondent named in the petition in equity filed in this court August 31, 1909, appearing specially.

Denies the identity of the petitioner as alleged, and says that the petitioner is not the son of Daniel Russell, late of Melrose, and the husband of Mary L. Russell the Daniel H. Russell named in the will of said Daniel Russell, admitted to probate by decree of said petition.

"Denies that the petitioner is the son of Mary L. Russell, as stated in paragraph 1 of said petition, and denies that he is entitled to one-half of the residue of the estate of the said respondent, and denies that the petitioner is the husband of Mary L. Russell, as stated in paragraph 2 of said petition.

"No Interest in Estate."

"3. Denies, as stated in paragraph 3, that the petitioner is Daniel Blake Russell named in said will and refuses to recognize the petitioner as such and to allow him to participate in the estate of said Daniel Russell and says that said will does not confer upon the petitioner any interest therein.

"Denies the right of the petitioner to ask this Court for a construction of the will of said Daniel Russell, and says that it has been found by this Court that the petitioner is not the son of said Mary L. Russell and that he has no interest in the said estate of said Daniel Russell.

"Denies the right of the petitioner to maintain his petition, for that it does not appear in the petition that the petitioner is an executor of or a trustee under the will of said Daniel Russell, or has in any official capacity for the instruction of the court filed with the petition Daniel Blake Russell, therein mentioned and described, or any part of the estate of the testator, Daniel Russell."

EXPLAINS SHAW TAX DODGING

the Quincy A. Shaw estate taxes was paid to that commission and not to the City Treasurer direct.

Fillebrown Urges New Law.

Charles R. Fillebrown, a prominent Boston business man and widely known authority on taxation, gave the Boston AMERICAN an interview in which he strongly condemns the exercisers of the Quincy A. Shaw estate for their tax dodging and suggests a law to penalize persons who rob the city of Boston through the suppression of taxable personal property.

Mr. Fillebrown is the head of the firm of Charles R. Fillebrown & Company at No. 77 Summer street. For many years he has been a professional student of tax problems. He is in close touch with city, State and national questions relating to taxation, and has been greatly interested in the exposure of the attempt of the Shaw executors to keep in the estate nearly half a million dollars rightfully belonging to the city of Boston.

Mr. Fillebrown calls the Shaw estate tax dodging one of the most flagrant cases of its kind that he can recall. He points out that, through the negligence of the Shaw executors, taxpayers in the city have had a burden forced upon them equivalent to a tax on 3,000 Boston homes each worth $5,000. He says that good citizens should be safeguarded from "robbed" by inadequate personal tax returns.

Commends the Mayor.

After declaring that a mere return of the tax money for "moral obligations" is not enough, Mr. Fillebrown terms the Shaw estate scandal a "gigantic suppression of personal property" and emphasizes the fact that there is no question of the right and the wrong of the matter. "As I view it," he said, "the question whether they violate the letter of the law or not, are just as guilty as they become to consider their actions from the standpoint of honesty."

Mayor Fitzgerald is commended by Mr. Fillebrown for his determination to proceed criminally against the Shaw estate executors if such prosecution can be made. Mr. Fillebrown goes on to say that it would be a pertinent question to know whether or not in his life-time the late Quincy A. Shaw escaped taxes due the city of Boston "which his estate would now be justified in paying in discharge of a 'moral obligation.'"

In an interview with an AMERICAN reporter Mr. Fillebrown of personal tax re-

"Outrage on City."

"This case is one of the most flagrant that has ever come to my notice. We do not often read of tax dodging on so large a scale, but, except for its magnitude, it is of every day occurrence. While this glaring instance of the suppression of personal property is an outrage on the city, it may touch on a few valuable practical lessons.

"In the present instance we see three executors concerned, whether criminally or not, in an effort to deprive the city treasury of nearly $500,000, or $250,000 annually for two years. What does this evasion mean to the other tax payers of Boston? The $250,000 a year for 1909-1910 which the Shaw estate did not pay, had burden which of right should have been borne by the Shaw estate had to be borne by other property holders in Boston. Out of the 70,000 dwellings in the city it required the equivalent of a tax on 3,000 Boston homes worth $5,000 each to offset this evasion. This means that almost one-fourteenth of the total number of dwellings in the city had to bear the tax which in all honesty should have been borne by the Shaw estate.

"The real estate owner is not the people who benefit by the expenditure of taxes. And if the real estate owners who have to suffer from instances like the one under consideration, the residential section suffer log the most.

"Public opinion may well be an aroused over the heinousness of the present case that the Legislature should see to it that future depredations on the treasuries of our city through suppression of tax returns are made hazardous to the tax dodgers, at least it is perhaps hopeless by law to equalize the taxation of personal property. While I would favor the best law possible on this point, I hold that there should be no such thing in theory as the exemption of intangible personal property taxes, as there can be no such system in fact. Tax rather that which is tangible and can be seen. But while I hold these ideas, I do think that with the law as it is being as they are at present, good citizens should be safeguarded from being robbed by personal tax returns.

System at Fault.

"In a case like the present Shaw estate, a mere return of the tax money for 'moral obligations' is not enough. There should be some way to frustrate the determination of executors to keep hidden any part of an estate, whether it be two-thirds of a multi-millionaire's estate, or but a small fraction of a poor man's personal property. In this way may be recruited the army to fight with Mayor Gaynor of New York for the abolition of the personal property tax, and transfer such taxes to such property as is not dependent upon executors' discretion.

"It is loosely calculated that not more than a quarter of the personal property of Boston is assessed. It is certain that a large part of personal property in Boston or any other city is not declared, as required by law. In the case of the Shaw estate, it is plain that the one-fourth reported for taxes bears out in a general way the above estimate. Nobody would think of laying the blame upon the assessors if it not their fault, but the fault of our taxation system. We need a larger proportion of tax on real estate, the values of which are not liable to be concealed.

"This seemingly accidental disclosure of a gigantic suppression of personal property in the Shaw estate is only another indication of what the tax amounts we annually miss through multitudinous suppressions of personal property. All of them added together make up a sum that would stagger us if we could discover just how much is lost to the public treasury each twelve months through the neglect of property owners in the matter of filing honest returns.

"All Guilty Who Break Law."

"This case is one more proof of the fallacy of undertaking to assess fugitive belongings. The presence of a large amount of personal property as well as improvements in Boston goes to make business better and to make the city more desirable to live in. If taxes were taken from land, or even from land and buildings, it would dissipate the temptations to a suppression of personal property values. The executors of the Shaw estate as well as the executors of every smaller estate and the possessors of personal property, large and small, ought to be honest and to make true returns. That is axiomatic. There is no question of the right and wrong of the matter.

"The fact that other men are evading the city of taxes does not relieve any one of the personal responsibility of honestly dealing with the city assessors. All who break the law, whether they violate the letter of the law or not, are just as guilty when we come to consider their actions from the standpoint of honesty.

"But the fact remains that in all these relations men simply will not be truthful in the accounting of their personal property holdings. The question naturally arises whether too much is not required of individuals, though left a legal matter to the honesty of property owners who should not have a system which takes only tangible things? Is there not a fault in the property of state or city inquiring into a man's private affairs, with the expectation that he is going to deal honestly in respect to what he honestly thinks ought to be none of our business?

"Why not tax the property itself of a corporation at its situs, in proportion to the expenses it imposes upon the community in which it is located, and exempt the paper certificates of stock here as it now, too strongly of double taxation?

"The action of Mayor Fitzgerald in trying to bring the guilty parties to the bar of justice will meet the approval of honest citizens. Indeed the Mayor is bound to do this under the same oath by which he is bound to see that the assessors use all possible diligence in ascertaining the true value of real estate.

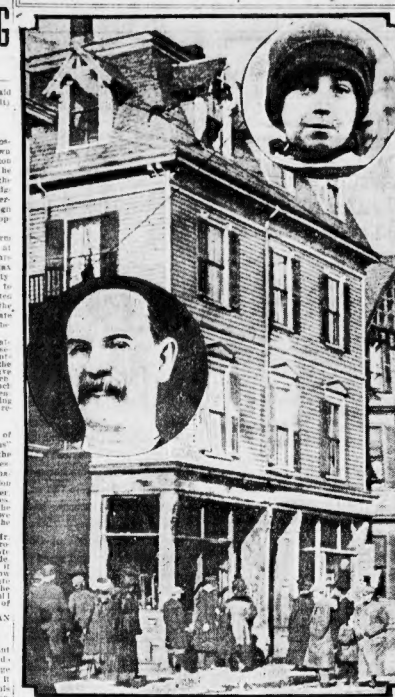
Did He Pay During Life?

"The Mayor might discover later that there is just as much tax money lost to the city by the under-assessment of great real estate values as by the non-assessment of personal property. In cases like the Shaw estate the assessors are asked to do the impossible. This case only shows the tremendous disadvantages of a dual system whose investments is common with those of the poor widow are non-shiftable. The Mayor is to be commended for saving the city as large a sum of money. He is correct in his attitude of getting the best possible lesson and the greatest possible correction out of the situation that the present law allows, or but a better law might justify. It would be a great event fact, in view of the prominence of this rich testator, to know whether or not the late Mr. Shaw has escaped taxes due on the city of Boston, which his estate would now be justified in paying in discharge of a moral obligation.

"This first disclosure on a large scale ought to strengthen the position of Mayor Fitzgerald in his effort to bring a larger proportion of taxes from the land, which no owner or executor can secrete or suppress.

"If the position of the Finance Commission is right, that the city was helpless to collect taxes by legal process, but was at the mercy of the moral sensitiveness of the executors, does it not indicate that some thing is wrong in the law?

"The best way to attain a bigger, better and busier Boston would be to get a better



Rescued Girl and Victim of Fire

Theresa Sweeney, and (at right) Agnes, and seven-year-old Ethel Munroe, who was saved by woman lodger.

MAN BURNED TO DEATH IN LYNN

Fire in a crowded lodging house at No. 37 Ireson street, Lynn, cost the life of an aged man and serious hurt several others early to-day. Two women and a bedridden cripple owe their lives to the bravery of firemen, and a dozen other women who fled in their night clothing are suffering from exposure and shock.

The blaze started on the ground floor, where Thomas Gardner ran a bakeshop and slept on a cot behind his ovens. Gardner, who was sixty years old, was suffocated by the flames and died in a frantic effort to force his way to the street.

Several other lives would have been sacrificed but for John J. Sullivan, who lives next door in Alpha Chambers. Aroused by the crackling of flames, he rushed out, broke through a window of the burning building and awoke the tenants by his cries. Then, after calling to a passing to sound an alarm.

When the firemen arrived, excited men and hysterical women were trying to make their way out through the smoke. In the hallway on the second floor they found Mrs. Nellie Hoopman, one of the proprietors of the lodging house, overcome by smoke. She was carried to the street and revived.

Cripple Rescued.

On the third floor they found George Birdseye, a cripple, helpless in bed and Captain Albert Preble made his way to the young man's room and carried him out.

Other firemen, meanwhile, had come upon Stella Green, one of the lodgers, bewildered and on the point of collapse, trying to drag herself to the stairs. She was rescued just as Henry Stanbery, another lodger, was taken down a ladder from the roof, as he was about to leap to the street.

The men and women taken from the house were hurried to shelter in neighboring buildings and cared for by physicians.

In the first few minutes of the blaze the firemen formed but Gardner was probably in the building and Assistant Chief Roberts crowded through the front door and attempted to make his way into the bakeshop. Several times he was driven back and it was not until some time afterward that Firemen Frank and James Rooney and Lieutenant Alonzo Allen, who had been rushed in wet towels, rushed into the oven room, only to stumble across the body of the baker.

Woman Saves Child.

In the first rush for safety Ethel Munroe, seven years old, daughter of Mrs. Hattie Munroe, Mrs. Boardman's partner in the lodging house, was overlooked, but she was carried out by a Mrs. Jones, who occupied a room on the second floor.

Several of the firemen were badly burned before the blaze, which ate its way rapidly up between partitions, was extinguished. Much of the property of the lodgers was saved, after all had been rescued from the street, and the property damage is estimated at about $1,500. The lodging house was opened only two weeks ago by its present owners.

ARREST WOMAN ON COUNTERFEIT CHARGE

Carmela Venuti of No. 108 Bremen street, East Boston, was arraigned before United States Commissioner Hayes, charged with passing counterfeit money. The woman went into the grocery store of Mrs. Johanna Brunen, at No. 80 Maverick street, East Boston, and tendered a 25-cent piece in payment for a purchase. Mrs. Brunen was suspicious and asked the opinion of a man in the store, who told her the coin was counterfeit, and caused the arrest of the Venuti woman.

Archbishop Will Crown the Queen.

LONDON—King George has decided that the Archbishop of Canterbury shall crown the Queen as well as him next June. This is in accordance with precedent of the early times, practically the only exception being at the coronation of King Edward, when Queen Alexandra was crowned by the Archbishop of York. There was no sermon at the coronation of King Edward, the service having been specially shortened owing to the fact that the King had not completely recovered from a serious illness, but at the approaching coronation the sermon will be preached by the Archbishop of York.

Americans Balked by Germans.

LONDON—German diplomacy, according to a Constantinople telegram, has secured the refusal of the concession which J. H. Moore of New York, father of Princess Torlonia, recently secured from Turkey on behalf of American capitalists for the construction of a railway from Angora to the Russian-Asiatic frontier. The Turkish ministerial council, moved by German influence, defeated the project, although it was backed by the American embassy.

Young Turks Plan Revolt.

ATHENS—Word has been received from Constantinople that the Committee of Union and Progress of Young Turks in Salonica has decided definitely to make an armed effort in Crete to destroy peace in the island and bring about a revolution so as to be able to call for intervention by the protecting Powers.

Wright Defends Patents.

PARIS—Wilbur Wright, the American inventor and aviator, testified before the Tribunal in his suit to protect his patents in the construction of aeroplanes. He sketched the history of his inventions and of two hours submitted to a searching cross-examination.

BALL MAGNATE'S DEATH MYSTERY

ST. LOUIS, March 25.—The sudden death of M. Stanley Robison, the reputed owner of the St. Louis National League Club, which occurred yesterday, is shrouded in mystery, and has brought to light many strange things connected with the inner workings of the team.

It is stated by the most reliable authority that a rival club owner holds the late magnate's note for $40,000, and besides this has other substantial claims against the St. Louis Club. It is stated that the man in the case is none other than John T. Brush, president of the New York Baseball Club.

In short it is believed that the late M. Stanley Robison was only a figurehead with the Mound City team, and that he was forced to comply with the wishes of the men behind the throne.

This would seem to prove true the charges which have so often been made in the past, namely that the National League is controlled by syndicate baseball.

Several deals in the past with the New York club point to the fact that Gotham interests controlled the St. Louis team. When John T. Brush handed the Cardinals $10,000 for Bobbie Shannon a few years back it is stated that he did so in order to tide over a financial crisis in the club.

Two years ago Roger Bresnahan of the Giants became manager of the Cardinals, and Schiel, Raymond and Murray went to New York. It is now believed that this deal was engineered by Brush.

Again at the National League meeting two years ago President Robison did not participate in the voting, which ran against the present President Lynch, out of courtesy.

39 LOST WITH BRITISH VESSEL

VANCOUVER, B. C., March 25.—The steamer Seeheit has been wrecked off Beachy Head, near Victoria, with a loss of thirty-nine lives. The disaster occurred late yesterday afternoon, but the first news of it reached here this morning.

According to the information received here the vessel was blown out of its course in a storm and went upon the rocks. The sunken hull was stove in and rapidly filled despite the efforts of the men manning the pumps. The ship's wireless crashed when the waves were washing over it. A great comber dashed into the cabin, sweeping it.

Those on board when the vessel went down were thirty-five passengers and a crew of four. The passengers were laborers bound for a construction camp of the Canadian Northern Railroad at Pendier Bay. The captain of the vessel was H. F. James, manager of the company.

The first news of the disaster was received at Esquimault when a boy arrived in a gasoline launch from William Head, a quarantine station. He said that the vessel had turned turtle and that all on board had perished. The tug William Jolliffe was immediately sent to the scene of the wrecked vessel.

JAPANESE BANK LOANS TO CHINA

PEKIN, March 25.—The government has accepted a loan of $5,000,000 from the Yokohama Specie Bank in Yokohama, Japan, and will give in security 5 per cent railway bonds. The loan, which will be used to meet a deficit of the railway board, is without political significance.

REPORT MISS ELKINS BRIDE

WASHINGTON, March 25.—A rumor is circulating about Washington to-day that Miss Katherine Elkins and William Hitt of Chicago and Washington were married in Arizona early this week on their way North from Florida.

A note stating this rumor was sent to both Mr. Hitt and Miss Elkins. At the Hitt mansion, No. 1,501 New Hampshire avenue, the information was given that Mr. Hitt was at the Elkins home in K street, N. W., and the note was carried there and received by Mr. Hitt. Both Mr. Hitt and Miss Elkins sent back the non-committal sentence, "No answer."

Mr. Hitt's presence at Mrs. Elkins's home last night was all the more remarkable because the rest of Washington society was at the White House musicale, a festivity Miss Elkins could not attend on account of her mourning.

Mr. Hitt and Miss Elkins spent a part of the week in the Grand Canon section of Arizona, under the chaperonage of Miss Elkins's sister-in-law, Mrs. Blaine Elkins. Society here has been in momentary expectation of the news of an engagement and therefore does not hesitate to believe that Miss Katherine has stolen a march on her friends. The silence of the parties most concerned tends to give credence to the report.

There are smiles at the way the young people stole a march on them when they arranged to be house guests of the Joseph Leiters in Florida. First Miss Elkins went South with her mother and sister-in-law. Then Mr. Hitt left Washington for New York "on business," but somehow or other got to Florida to join the housebout party on its big game hunting trip.

Then it was announced that Mr. Hitt was returning with the Leiters to Washington, while Miss Elkins was going to Palm Beach to join her mother.

Instead, Mr. Hitt left the Leiter party somewhere en route, and joined Miss Elkins and her party for a jaunt through the Grand Canon, before coming to Washington, where they arrived late last night.

COLLEGE BOYS ADD TO HOOK NIGHT FUN

The Shean brothers were not strong on stage etiquette, but they were there with the melody, and that caught the crowd at the amateur performance at the Columbia last night. They won first place in popular approval from a large field, little May Alvin of South Boston coming in second. Two imitates from a college fraternity furnished a bit of fun with their efforts to please the secret society contingent present, but they narrowly escaped the hook, which got on its work on so many others.

DAUGHTER OF ENVOY DANCES

LONDON, March 25.—Miss Flora Sackville-West, daughter of the former British Minister to the United States, made her debut as a dancer at the Palladium this week.

The first appearance of the beautiful young woman, whose mother was Juanita Duran de Ortega, the celebrated Spanish dancer, and who until after Sackville-West's death was thought to have been the wife and widow of the diplomat, created quite a stir.

Miss West was prominent in the suit brought by her brother, in which it was decided that her father never had been the husband of Mme. de Ortega. When it was announced that she would go upon the stage, she was billed as "The Honorable Flora Sackville-West, daughter of the late Lord Sackville."

The Sackville family objected to the use of the name and much petting was withdrawn. She is still known, however, as Flora Sackville-West. Her performance is entitled "La Danse des Fleurs."

The curtain rises upon the interior of a seraglio, whose owner, a native prince, has been captivated by an houri whose face he has seen but once. He sings of his love and, exhausted, sinks into a sleep. He dreams, and in his dreams the girl appears and dances for him. As he awakes she is bending over him. He snatches aside the veil that hides her face and seizes her, but she eludes him.

Miss Flora Sackville-West.

ANYBODY SEEN MAUD MULLER?

The College News, the student paper at Wellesley College, is looking for Maud Muller.

As this is not the haying season the News naturally is unable to locate the famous heroine of Whittier's poem in "the meadows sweet with hay."

The News publishes in its current issue a list of Wellesley graduates of 1910 who had expressed a wish for employment on leaving college, but who have neglected to keep the college posted as to their success. There are twenty-five names in the list. The eighteenth name is Maud S. Muller.

She is not, however, the girl who raked the hay, but is Miss Maud S. Muller of No. 9o2 Elm street, New Haven, according to the 1910 class records.

Another girl in the list is Miss Meredith E. Biddle of Pennsylvania. There is no answer to the Biddle query either.

GYPSIES, DOGS AND HORSES DEPORTED

John Allison, a gypsy, with his collection of horses, dogs, a cart, wife and daughter, were deported on the Winifredian for Liverpool. He arrived March 15, appealed from a decision by a board of special inquiry, the deportation order being sustained by a telegram from Washington. Since Allison and his family were detained at the immigration station the horses and dogs have been boarded in East Boston. Allison, however, will probably have to pay freight on the horses and van, though he and family will be carried back gratis.

GLOVER ATTACKS SCIENCE FAITH

NEW YORK, March 25.—The World-today says:

At Concord, N. H., this morning Geor. W. Glover, son of Mary Baker G. Eddy, will file through his lawyers an amended bill in equity petitioning the Superior Court to set aside the residuary clause in his mother's will.

Under this clause the bulk of Mrs. Eddy's estate, reckoned at about $2,000,000 is given to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston.

Glover's original petition seeks to create a new issue which may with regards of public importance. The millions left by the founder of Christian Science is pushed into the background, as it were.

The paramount issue raised by the amended petition is the Christian Science faith.

In their answer to the Glover bill as originally filed the five directors of the church made oath that the Christian Science Church is "a religious, essentially charitable in fundamental purpose and having as its aim the "spreading of religion," the "spiritual education of mankind" and the "overcoming of sin, suffering, disease and distress."

Attacks Whole Church.

The amended Glover petition, reiterating the arguments in the original, strikes straight at Mrs. Eddy's creed and the highest court of New Hampshire is asked to determine, virtually, this issue:

"Is Christian Science a religion, helpful to mankind, and also a charity, as the directors of the mother church make oath that it is, or is the creed of Mrs. Eddy, in tenet and practice, not a religion of charity, but a foe to society, a violator of the law and opposed to public policy?"

The amended bill first takes up the Christian Science manual, reciting a long list of provisions to show there is practically no Christian Science church outside the self-perpetuating board of directors who are in absolute control and have the sole power to admit to membership and to excommunicate.

Following this the bill quotes at still greater length from the manual in support of the petitioners' contention that the Christian Science Church is a great money-making institution through the collection of annual fees from practitioners and the sale of various publications, including the writings of Mrs. Eddy, the copyright value of which has been fixed by the New Hampshire assessors at $1,400,000.

Holds It Not Charitable.

Taking up the doctrines and practices of Christian Science, the petition reads:

"The plaintiff further says that the asserted fundamental purpose for which said church was established and exists, namely, the promotion of the doctrines of Christian Science, is partly to be ascertained by an examination of the book entitled 'Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures,' and asks leave to introduce in evidence that work, a church manual 'Christ and Christmas,' and other publications, for the purpose of showing that the church, which is alleged to be a religious society, cannot be deemed a charity."

All the averments of the original petition as to the incompetency of Mrs. Eddy to exercise unbiased judgment in the management of her affairs are reaffirmed in the amended petition; also, that Mrs. Eddy was powerless to protect herself against fraud, being in the charge and custody of the defendant direct or some other church, who held her secluded.

DESTINN HEARD AS BUTTERFLY

"Madama Butterfly" was sung for the last time this season last night at the Boston Opera House before a large audience. Emmy Destinn came over from New York to sing the title role, and Herman Jadlowker, the Metropolitan tenor, also made the trip to sing Pinkerton. The performance was a spirited and splendid one. Destinn sings the dramatic music of the opera as no other soprano can sing it, while her conception of the role is quite acceptable, despite the fact that she is a Bohemian three ordinary Japanese women. Jadlowker is a manly and tuneful Pinkerton. Polese is effective as Sharpless, and the others in the cast were quite as they should have been. Mr. Pratt conducted with proper passion and fire.

BATONYI TOO ILL TO RETURN TO NEWPORT

TWO SURVIVE IN DEATH BOAT

NANTUCKET, March 25.—Nelson Davis, Jr., and Winifred Carver, the survivors of the crew of the barge Stonington, are still in a critical condition at Great Point lighthouse, almost in front of which the lifeboat in which they and their dead captain and another sailor were borne across the dreaded sands and through the surging breakers of Great Point Rip was beached.

Carver, who, frozen stiff to the steering oar, guided the tide craft to safety, is still delirious, while young Nelson recovered consciousness only to lapse into an insensible condition.

Two Frozen to Death.

Never was a tragedy of the New England coast fraught with more patient and thrilling features of suffering. The four men, two frozen to death and two all but dead, were the crew of the Stonington, which with three other barges was in tow of the tug Jamie Willard, bound from New York to Boston. Captain Nelson Davis, son of Nels Davis, 3d, and a sailor whose name could not be discovered.

Captain Baker of Great Point Light and his assistant, James Harris, were stationed at the slight of an open boat in the Rips. They decided late in the afternoon to hail the craft ashore. Hauled to see tragedies, both started back for the comparative safety of the three huddled bodies, deserted, in the bottom of the boat, while Carver at the helm kept upright by keeping his clothes and his frozen fingers clutching the steering oar, sat gibbering in the stern.

As the two aged men drew near, Carver could tell by their faces and he fell unconscious on top of his comrades.

The grim horror of the tragedy was gained from Carver in his brief interval of consciousness. He told the rescuers he sailed that fact that if the crew had stuck to the Stonington the lives of all would have been saved and hours of terrible suffering averted. Carver said:

"The Stonington was leaking and we thought she would sink, so we launched the lifeboat, although the wind was blowing a half gale then and the temperature was only 20 degrees above zero," he said.

"We started for Great Point, which we figured must be fifteen miles away. We were scantily clothed, with no oilskins, as the seas were running high, and we quickly were soaked to the skin. We didn't have room for much food, and only one shoe on.

"We took turns at the oars to keep warm, and they were divided to the bottom of the boat one by one. I can't tell you how I am here."

Wishes It Were Dream.

"It's the Rip," he screamed once in delirium. "I am gone; I can't keep her up. We're broadside on. She's gone.

"I wish it were a dream," he shouted again and again.

The Stonington, for many years noted as one of the coastal sound steamers, was the chief barge of the Willard fleet. While off Bass river the Stonington sprung a leak and in the darkness a spar from the tug struck the craft and she began to sink. The signals of distress were not answered and he decided to abandon the barge and strike for the dreaded Great Point through the fierce northwester.

Through the tug captain, Captain Fitzgerald of the Willard, decided it was too dangerous to attempt to launch the scow-shaped lighter which lay in the gale and signaled the barges to anchor.

The other barges heeded his signals and dropped their mud hooks. Captain Fitzgerald announced the Stonington discovered that the crew had left the barge, and that the pumps were half way feet of water in her hold, and was taking additional water fast. He decided to tow her to port, but was unsuccessful, as she sank near Pollock Rip Lightship.

WALTER CALLS BOSTON WICKED

of dramatic uplift as a direct intention to degrade the theatre, to take the reputation of a man who has builded it more carefully and longer than you have your own, and you endeavor to place him on the level of a common reviewer of public morals.

I need not call your attention to the fact that in your condemnation of this play you have taken its players, including Miss Frances Starr, and without trial or hearing condemned them as accessories before and after the fact in an effort to debauch public taste and public and American conduct. I need not remind you that my own reputation, little as it is, if your judgment be correct and justified, has not been challenged by it into the mud, and that you have given me no opportunity to show those thousands your administration is now tolerating and which I, in spite of those who would rob me of my good name, have won more from the expectation of women's intelligence.

All this you have considered carefully weighing the possibility of public condemnation and are the last authority of the public censor of your city. Surely you could not have been hasty; surely you must have considered the duty of your own city, its cleanliness. Its debauchery, and this Fenway section was much more vicious than all of the extravagant show I am about to detail to you and heretofore almost to be suppressed.

Calls in Critics.

In your printed interview you speak of the high moral standard of what you desire to call the "Theatre of virtue"—meaning Boston, yet in gaining the conclusion that "The Easiest Way" is immoral, you call in critics from New York, who, by reason of your fellow townsmen, must ordinarily suffer in order to judge the quality of its intention and of its effect. I need not call your attention to the fact that even the Boston Transcript, than whom no better example of the drama is to be found in the English speaking race, no more sincere critic, or no one more conscientious in his side of the Atlantic. Nor need I name to you Professor Baker, at the head of the dramatic department of Harvard University, or Mr. Philip Hale, all of whom pronounced it a good play, and who have lived in Boston as you do to the entire country by telling this drastic sentence of cowardice and hypocrisy.

There is but one thing that I can write that may in any possible way vindicate your course that you have not decided—quoted at sixty-five cents the pound, a record price, mean a high jump in the prices of the finished product in the hotels and restaurants, and dividends are not quite as popular among the after theatre dinner and suppers as they were. Only the very big and reckless spenders care to look a lobster in the face at prevailing prices. Claim boiled lobster at eighty-five cents the pound is a positive confiscation of the actual price yet paid for lobsters in Boston, but it is likely to go even higher than that.

Extremely cold weather along the Maine and Nova Scotia coasts is blamed for the shortage in the supply. The hardy and avaricious fishermen cannot get to the lobster pots because of the ice, and the supply from those places, on which the Boston market depends, has fallen way below the normal.

Dealers hold out no hope of better conditions for the present at least. They say the shortage will continue until the bays and inlets where the lobster lurks are free of ice. Meanwhile the lobsters in those places are waxing "fat and sassy" and the prices are Grainne-Whiteing.

Lobster said, $1 the plate. Wow!

MYSTERIOUSLY HURT, DYING AT HOSPITAL

Suffering from concussion of the brain and a broken jaw, sustained in some manner as yet unknown to the police, Herbert P. Howe, aged sixty, employed as a traveling salesman for a prominent shoe concern, is at the Relief Hospital in a serious condition. The doctors say he has small chance of recovery. Howe lives at No. 86 Myrtle street, Somerville. He was found last night lying on the sidewalk in Haymarket square, near Blackstone street, by Patrolman Horgan of the Hanover Street Station. The police think Howe fell or was assaulted in making his way from a saloon, several bills and some change were found on Howe.

REAL PUBLICITY FOR BLUE UNION LABEL

After a year's trial to decide the comparative value of newspaper advertising as opposed to window and placard, Boston Clerkmakers' Union has voted an assessment of $5 for each of its 2,400 members to advertise its union label this year. Previous to this year the union has appropriated the entire $12,000 for advertisement in the daily newspapers of Boston and vicinity. The result, it is claimed, was disastrous. The union clerkmakers spent a like amount in newspaper advertising, and it is now given out officially that it is firmly convinced it pays to advertise their blue label in this way.

DIES JUST BEFORE HIS WEDDING DATE

WORCESTER, March 25.—Miss Signe Erlandson, a young Swedish girl of No. 94 Fraternal avenue, is broken-hearted over the death of Sigvar Sigfrid Nordin, whom she was to have married within a few weeks. Their engagement was announced several weeks ago. A home in the Belmont Hill district had been fitted up by Nordin and the young woman was preparing for her new life. But three days ago N. P. was stricken down with an attack of typhoid and removed to the City Hospital. Miss Erlandson was at his bedside daily.

DIAZ TROOPS ROUTED BY MADERO'S FORCES

EL PASO, March 25.—Members of the revolutionary junta here are jubilant over news that the federals had suffered a crushing defeat north of the city of Chihuahua. General Madero's main column forced an engagement with a detachment of federals, killing 150 and taking forty prisoners, according to the reports. The insurgents loss was not given. It was said the federals were retreating in rout.

LOBSTER PRICES IN HIGH FLIGHT

Cold days for the lobsters. Also for the lobster eaters of Boston.

Live lobsters—not broiled—quoted at sixty-five cents the pound, a record price, mean a high jump in the prices of the finished product in the hotels and restaurants, and dividends are not quite as popular among the after theatre dinner and suppers as they were. Only the very big and reckless spenders care to look a lobster in the face at prevailing prices. $25,000 BLAZE IN PROVIDENCE

PROVIDENCE, March 25.—Fire that started early to-day in the drug store of Elmer W. Robinson & Co., Watchmaker square swept the square and did $25,000 damage before it was extinguished. The East Providence postoffice was burned.

The fire was caused by the explosion of chemicals just after Robinson had left the store with four other men. He rushed back and attempted to extinguish the flames, but another bottle of acid exploded and he was badly burned about the face and hands and driven from the store. Thomas O'Neil, a clerk in the postoffice, rescued the mail sacks and books of the postoffice.

The building where the fire started is of three stories and wooden. It was occupied on the lower floor by the drug store and postoffice and on the upper floors by the East Providence Business Men's Association, the Venice Men's Republican Club and the Progressive Club. An adjoining building, used as an Armenian boarding house, was also destroyed.

LAST TRIBUTE TO T. T. WILLIAMS

NEW YORK, March 25.—Funeral services for Thomas T. Williams, treasurer and publisher of the New York Evening Journal, were held last night in the Hotel Gotham, which for several years was the home of Mr. Williams. Rev. Henry E. Cobb of the Dutch Reformed Church officiated. Mr. Cobb paid a high tribute to the character of the dead publisher.

At the request of the widow the casket was sealed before the service began. The many floral tributes received from personal friends and business associates were banked about it.

Although the services were private, big delegations from Mr. Williams's intimate friends, there was a large number present. A delegation of more than fifty members of the Manhattan Club and delegations of which the dead man had been for years a member, attended. The Rocky Mountain Club and the Publishers' Association were also represented.

Among other organizations whose representatives were there were the chapel of the pressmen of the New York American and the Evening Journal, the New York Mailers' Union and the Evening Journal staff correspondents.

Others present were William F. Sheehan, Justice O'Dwyer, Justice Seabury, Judge Lewis J. Conlin, George Wilson, Mrs. Anita Tevey, sister of Mrs. W. R. Hearst, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. O'Reilly, Clement J. Driscoll, Arthur Brisbane, Charles J. Sheen, Patrick H. Larney, Joseph D. Bannon, William Barry, William Grey, John J. Healy, N. Mott and James C. Dayton.

The interment will be in Woodlawn.

ALIENISTS QUIZ ABBATEMAGGIO

VITERBO, March 25.—Gennaro Abbatemaggio's story of the crimes of the Camorrists, partly told on the stand yesterday, will be resumed when the court resumes its sittings Tuesday. It is awaited with breathless interest by friends of the Neapolitan prisoners who are likely to be set to death by the betrayer's recital.

Not to be outdone by the Camorrists, who have retained the noted alienist, Professor Altadonna, to attack the sanity of the informer, the prosecution to-day made arrangements to have other specialists, equally as noted, examine Abbatemaggio and file a report for the Crown.

Abbatemaggio, as he was interrogated, stood somewhat at bay, erect, and with his chest thrown forward, as if challenging the world to spike him. He gesticulated and endeavored to give strength to his arguments by dramatic gestures. He described the organization of the Camorra, its degrees, rites and modes of work. He said he knew everything concerning the organization, because he was its most active member until 1907, and participated in all its daring enterprises.

Treasurer of the Loot.

The witness enumerated thefts he committed with Luigi Arena, who sat in the big cage with the other prisoners, glaring at Abbatemaggio and biting his lips as if he would like to eat the informer. Abbatemaggio presently said he was himself Luigi Lasorsa, treasurer of the Camorra, was made receiver of fleet-wide goods.

When he reached the climax of his testimony, Abbatemaggio summarized the Camorra by saying:

"It is a filthy association."

Abbatemaggio said that the year after he began his criminal career he was promoted to the "santa" grade—a promotion which sometimes required years to attain in the Camorra.

"I was very proud then, just as proud as I now am ashamed," he said. "I am glad to be in prison, for I desire to explate all the evil I have done."

At the next sitting of the court, Abbatemaggio will resume the entire history of the Cuoccolo murders.

Bows Low to the Jury.

Throughout his testimony, Abbatemaggio bore himself in a dignified manner. He was thoroughly absorbed with his mission as informer, and as he re-entered his cage at the conclusion of the sitting he bowed to the jury as if he were ascending a throne.

The examination of Luigi Arena was highly dramatic. He is a battering old man and a formerly settled fellow.

Arena, pointing at the informer, was strung out of his calm by the testimony of Abbatemaggio.

"Curses upon you and your mother, you infamous viola!" he hurled at him from before the guards could overcome him and choke off his diatribes.

Arena and two sentenced for more than seventy crimes, ranging in degree from murder to petty larceny. He declared that he had been sent to Lampedusa Island, the Italian Siberia, through the machinations of Cuoccolo, and that it was he and not Cuoccolo who had inspired Cuoccolo's death.

"I take the blame," he cried in a quavering voice. "I wrote to O'Mandrier and Barbaro, urging them to kill the spy Cuoccolo."

CURLEY COMES OUT FOR MAYOR

Congressman "Jim" Curley intends to write "Mayor" before his name. Politicians have known that for a long time. Now, in a speech to his Tammany Club members, Curley points out and says so, all but actually mentioning his own name. He doesn't need to say that. Every member of the club knows what Curley means. At the annual meeting of the Tammany Club, after the officers had been elected for the coming two years, Congressman Curley rose, amid great cheering, and said with emphasis:

"Some day the city will be right and we will have an opportunity of electing a man Mayor who will represent an organization that has always been right. We are united and we will come nearer than any other organization to this city.

"The club has been born into a fight with its tail hanging down; we have always gone into a contest with our true colors flying. The right time has not yet come, but when it does, I don't know who the man will be, but the Tammany Club of Ward 17 will be on the line."

Curley might as well have said right out:

"When the right time comes James M. Curley is going to be elected Mayor of Boston."

That was what he meant, and the members knew it. There was a riot of cheering in consequence.

Following his mayoralty declaration Curley attacked Louis K. Rourke, Commissioner of Public Works, saying:

"The city is going to go right some day and the workingmen are going to have a square deal.

"Under reform administration—and I don't care who the Mayor may be—never succeeded itself. The city is going along onto the rocks, but if they intend to put it over on the workingmen something is going to happen. The merchant and the business man will not be squeezed out by the workingman. We have killed the present proposed garbage disposal contract of Mr. Rourke, and I firmly believe that it is equitable and good for all."

200 FAMILIES MADE HOMELESS BY FLAMES

NEW YORK, March 25.—Two hundred families were made homeless by a big fire which completely destroyed practically all the buildings on Barren Island, off Jamaica, L. I. A high wind swept the flames over the entire colony.

Play the Piano In One Hour

Without Lessons or Knowledge of Music You Can Play the Piano or Organ in One Hour.

Wonderful New System That Even a Child Can Use.

FREE TRIAL

She Doesn't Know One Note From Another, But Plays Like a Music Master.

Impossible, you say? Let us prove it at our expense. We will teach you to play the piano or organ and will not ask one cent until you do play.

A musical genius from Chicago has just invented a wonderful system whereby anyone can learn to play the Piano or Organ in one hour. With this new method you don't have to learn one note from another, not in an hour or a day, but you can be playing the popular music within all the fingers of both hands and playing it well.

The invention is so simple that even a child can now master music without costly instructions. Anyone can learn to play by note in a few days merely by asking. Simply write, saying, "Send me the Easy Form Music Method as announced in Boston American." The complete system, together with 100 pieces of music, will then be sent you FREE, all charges prepaid and absolutely not one cent to pay.

You keep it seven days to thoroughly prove it to all that is claimed for it, then if you are satisfied, send us $1.50 and one dollar a month until $6.50 in all is paid. If you are not delighted with it, send it back within seven days and you will have risked nothing and will be under no obligations to us.

Be sure to state number of white keys on your piano or organ. Address Easy Method Music Company, 2372 Clarkson Building, Chicago.

JORDAN GIFT TO CONSERVATORY

The New England Conservatory of Music through the generosity of Eben D. Jordan has just received title to a lot of 11,350 feet of land fronting on Huntington avenue, and adjoining the Conservatory building. It is expected that an appeal will be made to the many friends of the institution to provide the requisite funds for an extension of the present building to be built on this land. Although the present three-story structure of Grecian style of architecture has been occupied less than ten years the school has outgrown its accommodations, it greatly needs additional class rooms as well as new dormitory facilities. The former need can be supplied on the site now made available. The insufficiency of the three Conservatory residences in Hemenway street involves still another problem.

The land conveyed to the Conservatory by Mr. Jordan is assessed for $31,200. It has a frontage of forty feet on Huntington avenue. It supplements Mr. Jordan's munificent contribution of Jordan Hall in the Conservatory building and numerous other benefactions which are assisting to make Boston the music centre of North America.

FLOWER SHOW OPENS TO-NIGHT

The National Flower Show opens this evening in the Mechanics Building. Hundreds of entries have been received. There are $12,000 in prizes, as well as many beautiful cups and medals. Governor Foss, Mayor Fitzgerald and Representative McCall will open the convention at 8 o'clock.

MANSFIELD CONFERS WITH HITCHCOCK

Postmaster Mansfield spent the day in conference with Postmaster-General Hitchcock and other officials of the department discussing conditions in the Boston postoffice. He will probably resign to Boston Monday.

KATHERINE WARREN; HELEN SEARS HER MAID OF HONOR

MISS KATHERINE WARREN

MISS HELEN SEARS

As was rather expected by the Back Bay set, Miss Helen Sears is to be one of the maids of honor when Miss Katherine Warren is married to John E. Thayer, Jr., on April 6.

The two girls made their debut the same Winter, three seasons ago. Miss Warren traveled extensively abroad with Miss Helen Sears and her mother, Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears.

Miss Katherine Warren is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel D. Warren of Beacon street and Mattapoisett. She is a Vincent Club girl and a member of the New Riding Club. On her mother's side she is a granddaughter of the late Ambassador Bayard.

Last August Mrs. Warren announced her daughter's engagement to John E. Thayer, Jr., Harvard, '06, and son of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Thayer of Lancaster. The wedding on April 6 will unite two of the most prominent families in Boston society.

AGED TEMPLAR DILLAWAY DEAD

Charles Henry Dillaway, the oldest member of the Boston commandery of th Knights Templar, is dead at "Longridge, his beautiful home on Worcester street in Wellesley Hills. The funeral will take place at the home, Monday, at 11 o'clock. Burial will be at Woodlawn cemetery.

He was in his eighty-seventh year, and death is attributed to "old age." His wife died about two years ago, and it is believed that grief over her loss induced the first breaking up of his robust constitution. His health was further impaired when he broke his leg about a year ago.

Mr. Dillaway retired from active business about two years ago, being succeeded by his grandson, C. Warren Dillaway, as average adjuster of losses on vessels, with offices on Kilby street. He was born March 14, 1825, on Salem street, next to the old Christ Church in the North End, where he lived for years and where his father and grandfather resided.

He attended the old Eliot school and was graduated about 1840. He was a member of the Old School Boys of Boston.

When he joined the Knights Templar, in 1857, they had 680 members in the organization, and he was the only one left of those members. He leaves two daughters and three sons and a number of grand and great grandchildren. The daughters are Miss Laura Dillaway and Mrs. Hetty D. Winton, both of Wellesley. The sons are Charles H. Dillaway of Melrose, Edward J. Dillaway of Malden and Willard S. Dillaway of Wellesley.

O'MEARA FIGHTS PUBLICITY BILL

Police Commissioner O'Meara walked up to the State House yesterday and made a speech protesting against any publicity in the Boston police department. He spoke in opposition to a bill introduced by Representative James F. Cavanagh which would open the doors of the now secret hearings given to members of the Boston police force when charges are made against them. Mr. O'Meara attacked the newspapers, saying they were the only ones that wanted any publicity. Mr. O'Meara was answered by Junius T. Anderson, lawyer.

"This bill simply asks that the public business be conducted in the open and is one of a number of bills to bring this about in Massachusetts," said Mr. Anderson. "The State is alone in the United States on the matter of secret hearings.

"We ask the people in considering that these hearings be as open as the courts. There is no reason why a policeman charged with a crime should be tried in secret more than any other person.

Public Pays the Bills.

"No one today would come up in the Legislature and ask that secret trials be restored in the courts. The judges, the public, no one would think of such a thing. And so it is with these hearings, with requests, with hearings on applications for liquor licenses, with all phases of the police business for which the public pays the bills and has the right to know what is going on and how its business is being conducted.

"Hearings of policemen charged with crime or violating their police rules are tried in public in New York as well as in every other State in the Union. Mr. O'Meara says Boston does not need to copy this from New York. He says that publicity has demoralized the New York police department.

"I did not expect Mr. O'Meara to favor this bill or anything but his own arbitrary rules for the regulation of the police department. No proposed reform in the Boston police department has ever met with his approval.

"He says that public hearings have demoralized the New York department. Open hearings have always existed there. Yet if the Boston police department is not demoralized I am very much mistaken, and I base this conclusion on the reign of crime, the holdups and robberies which all the Boston papers are printing from day to day.

Protest by O'Meara.

"Now publicity will certainly come in Massachusetts just as it has everywhere else in the United States. Hearings of all kinds will be open to the public by right. The doors will swing wide on the public's business.

"It may not come under this commissioner or under this Legislature, but it will come. The people pay the bills. They have the right to know how their paid servants are conducting the public business."

Mr. O'Meara protested against the bill. He denied that trials of policemen on charges were "secret."

"They were simply not open to the public," said Mr. O'Meara in objecting to the word "secret."

"The provision for open hearings is one of the bad things we particularly don't want to copy," said Mr. O'Meara. "There is no call for it. The public doesn't want it. I think the defendant officer prefers a private hearing. I think the public has through the press all the airing of a sensational character that it can digest and a great deal more."

LAWSON DEATH REPORT TO FOSS

The report of the autopsy secretly performed at Lynn on the body of George Lawson, who died under mysterious circumstances in the Westboro State Hospital for the Insane, will go, it is believed, direct to Governor Foss.

The widow is convinced that Lawson was kicked or beaten to death, but any evidence tending to prove this belief will be carefully shielded from the public until the report has been fully examined.

Mrs. Lawson says she is sure the autopsy will bear out the story of frightful abuse of patients told to the AMERICAN by Herbert L. Lakeman of South Boston, a former attendant at Westboro.

Dr. Albert Evans, who was suddenly sent to Lynn to perform the autopsy in the undertaking rooms to which the body had been taken from the tomb, brought back with him the stomach, heart, liver and brain for further examination. He stated that he would not disclose the cause of death "until the proper time comes," and he requested the two other physicians who were present at the autopsy, Drs. Davis and Trask of Lynn, to say as little as possible about the case.

Stomach Was Ruptured.

As early as the result of the autopsy could be learned the doctor found the following conditions:

The heart was hardened. This might have been caused by the use of "dope" to quiet a patient.

The stomach was ruptured. This might have come from violence.

The brain was in bad condition, as they expected. Violence might have added to this.

There was a blood clot on the back which might have been caused by a blow.

None of the doctors would state what in his opinion caused death. Dr. Evans made this significant remark:

"When I have a patient who dies I always know what he dies from, but in this case there is an uncertainty."

One of the doctors said with reference to the ruptures in the stomach:

"Kneeing" a Cause of Rupture.

"It is possible, of course, that they might have come from ulcerations. But it is just as possible that they may have been caused from what is known as 'kneeing,' a practice which I understand is in vogue in many of the hospitals for the insane."

Application for permission to remove the body from the receiving tomb was made by L. Herbert Nott, a friend of the Lawson family. He told the Board of Health that Dr. Evans was coming to Lynn to perform an autopsy. When it was suggested that it could be done at the cemetery, he replied that arrangements had been made to have the autopsy at an undertaking establishment.

Dr. Evans is said to have received instructions from Governor Foss to perform the autopsy, but the surgeon would not discuss the case. It had been charged that the body had been bleached or treated so as to remove traces of violence. Lawson weighed only 114 pounds, and the surgeons are reported to have discovered that his heart was in a very serious condition.

PECK'S SUIT GOES TO JURY TUESDAY

Judge Dodge in the United States Circuit Court will on Tuesday deliver his charge and give the $100,000 libel suit brought against the Post Publishing Company by Professor Harry Thurston Peck to the jury. Attorney Charles D. Francis of New York, in arguing for Professor Peck, contended that the element of malice was strong in the article in the Post. This, he said, was shown first in the correspondence following Professor Peck's demand for a retraction and in the general way in which the article was treated.

FOSS TAKING WALKING CURE

From 8 to 9 a. m. Governor Foss may be found any day now taking his morning constitutional in Jamaica Plain. He is doing it for his health. Strenuous labors at the State House, lasting often from 9 o'clock in the morning till 8 o'clock at night, have made it necessary for the executive to get some outdoor recreation to balance the pressure of indoor application to State affairs.

The morning walk is the medical answer. About 8 a. m. the Governor starts out for a constitutional about Jamaica Plain, ending at the State House. He arrives there between 9 and quarter past.

Politicians can take the tip that the best time to see the Governor during the hour before his office time is to trail him through Jamaica Plain.

GRAND TRUNK WILL BUILD NEW LINES

MONTREAL, March 25.—Grand Trunk Pacific plans for this season announced by E. J. Chamberlain, vice-president, include 616 miles of branch lines, 265 miles main line, 200 miles grading, while 140 new names will be added to the map in stations. Important branches will be those of Melville and Regina, one from Bickerdike on the main line to open the Pacific Pass coal fields, and those of Yellow Head Pass to be known as the Alberta Coal Branch. Three large bridges will be built.

SAY TAFT BROKE OFF JAP TREATY

LONDON, March 25.—The real reason why President Taft sent the American troops to the Mexican frontier, is the subject of much conjecture and open comment among the diplomatic and financial interests here.

It is openly asserted here that the expedition to the Rio Grande was planned by President Taft to influence the Mexican government against the consummation of the treaty with Japan which would have given the island empire unusual advantages in Mexican territory.

It is also asserted that had the treaty been signed it would have replaced a similar agreement and given to the Mikado a coaling station on the Pacific, with full right of fortification.

In diplomatic circles it is understood that the negotiations between Mexico and Japan were made known to President Taft and that he took drastic means of notifying Mexico of his protest.

It is understood that the action of President Taft resulted in breaking off the negotiations between Mexico and Japan.

On this point the Daily Express says:

"It is now apparent that the strong hand played by President Taft in putting warships on the coast and the troops on the frontier of Mexico served his purpose of peaceful diplomacy.

"We need not pursue too closely the reasons which dictated this immediate and drastic action and it is not necessary to impute to any other power unfriendly or aggressive designs against the United States. It was, however, always evident that these maneuvers were directed to some great national purpose and lend behind them some compelling anxiety. He has by his action made it clear to all the world that America will permit no hint or possibility of infringement of the Monroe doctrine.

"America has now in the Panama Canal a stronger motive for constant wakefulness and strong activity than in the past. The Panama Canal is and will remain American, and Mr. Taft's Mexican excursion enforces this. The moral success which he has won proves once more the value of vigilant determination.

"Mr. Taft did not hesitate when the peril had been revealed. He set in motion great forces, and so prevented the possibility of a tragedy."

MAYOR ENDS POLICE SNARL IN CAMBRIDGE

Mayor Brooks of Cambridge has straightened out the tangle over the appointment of new police sergeants by an arrangement with the civil service Commissioners by which five patrolmen are to take a non-competitive examination instead of all the men on the force. The patrolmen who will take this examination are Edward J. Welch, Joseph F. McCorry, Fred M. Ellis, Timothy J. Lalley and Peter J. Murphy. Two officers who will be promoted to the rank of sergeant are Richard H. Aylward and John E. Winslow.

TWO GAY HARVARD MEN ARRAIGNED

Two Harvard freshmen, who gave their names as Roger Griswold and William Lothrop Allen, Jr., are arraigned in Cambridge court to-day, charged with intoxication. The students, while out on a lark, are accused of pulling the trolley off a car near the Brookline transfer station. Allen said he lived at Claverly Hall, and his folks live at Chestnut Hill. Griswold claimed to room at Ridgely 26, and that his folks live in Cambridge.

DIAZ PLANS TO QUIT MEXICO

MEXICO CITY, March 25.—President Diaz will form his new cabinet of men close to the people. Senor Jose Yves Limantour, now minister of finance, will be the directing force in the formation of the new ministry. Following the institution of the new cabinet, President Diaz is expected to relinquish office to one of its members as president protem, and sail for Europe perhaps never to return to Mexico.

Miguel Ahumada, governor of Chihuahua, and one of the most popular of the Diaz followers, is slated to be the new minister of the interior succeeding Ignacio Corral. Senor Limantour, it is believed, will be tendered the important post of minister of foreign relations to succeed Enrique Creel, who is popular with the masses. The people have no confidence in Limantour. With Corral out of the way Limantour would be the strong man of the cabinet and his way would be clear to inaugurate the reforms that Madero wants. General Bernardo Reyes is a member of the new cabinet by practically a foregone conclusion. His popularity has increased since his absence in Europe where he has been practically a political exile.

By following the program thus far laid out President Diaz could retire with dignity from a situation which threatens his country. With the return of peace to Mexico he could return at some future time to spend his declining years in his native land and die the idol that he was a few years ago.

It is noticed that the name of Francisco I. Madero today played no part in the calculations of the unofficial cabinet makers. However the Madero faction would be represented and the ends sought by Madero would be attained in reforms which the new ministry would bring about. General Reyes has been a thorn in the side of the Diaz government for a long time. His popularity at the capital became so great that he was sent into Nuevo Leon as Governor. The people there acclaimed him as their leader and sought him to run for vice-president.

Senor Ahumada is like-wise very popular as a tribune, where he has been Governor for some time. He reduced taxes and initiated such territorial reforms as Madero could. Senor Ramon Corral, Vice-President and Minister of the Interior, and General Ortiz, the aged and infirm Minister of War, are expected to sail for Europe. Creel is reported to have engaged passage.

FIREMAN DIES IN BLAZE.

NEW YORK, March 25.—Fire followed by a series of naphtha explosions to-day demolished the plant of the United States and Canada Degreasing Syndicate in Williamsburg. Fireman Alfred George is believed to have perished. Four other men were badly hurt. Loss, $50,000.

HEADACHE? BACKACHE?

For the cure of woman's peculiar weaknesses and incompetency, giving rise to frequent headache, backache, dragging down pains or distress and kindred symptoms of weakness, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a most efficient remedy. It is equally valuable as a strength to nursing mothers and in preparing the system of the expectant mother for baby's coming, thus rendering childbirth safe and comparatively painless. The "Favorite Prescription" is a most potent strengthening tonic to the general system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic medicine of known composition, not even though the urging dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

STAHL WANTED TO JOIN DUFFY

By DOC STANLEY.

One of the most remarkable tales of diplomacy in baseball was revealed to-day when it became known that every one knowed to the game, including the persons appeal to the player himself, had been tried to secure the release from the Boston Red Sox by the Chicago White Sox of Jat Stahl, the clean-up hitting first baseker.

The retirement of Jake Stahl from the diamond was by no means unlooked for. He was both ready and willing to play with Hugh Duffy in Chicago his home city. Everything was satisfactory as to terms but President John I. Taylor refused to sanction the deal under any circumstances.

There can be little question but what the deal between the Boston and Chicago clubs as to Stahl would have gone through in some form had it not been for the hint handed out by the Hearst papers in the days of the past. The deal where John I. Taylor accepted Paddy Purtell and Frank Smith in exchange for Hugh Duffy and Amby McConnell was still too fresh in the mind of the magnate to result of coaxing across another piece of like nature.

Old Deal Balked Trade.

In the history of major league baseball there have only been two occasions when clubs of the league have been loyal and reproached, and that was, first, when the Boston Nationals exchanged Billy Nash with the Philadelphia Nationals for Billy Handiboe, and second, when the Cincinnati Club exchanged Tommy Corcoran with the Brooklyn Club for Tommy Dehlman.

And the memory of the criticisms the Boston club received from one corner of the country has never been forgotten by Abell, Lord and Dudley, both dead, was the fatal obstacle that prevented Jake Stahl from enjoying the baseball week and opportunity to play in Chicago, his home town.

Although it must be admitted that President Comiskey of the White Sox had no experienced first baseman to offer in exchange for Stahl in either Jack Fullis, George Mullins or Ted Jones, as Jiggs Donahue was too badly crippled by physical ills to be considered a possibility still with such an offer in sight he would have gone through.

Stahl was absolutely in his refusal to play again in Boston, and some arrangement would surely have been patched up had the club been any other league than the American league than Chicago. It was pointed out clearly to President Taylor that to dispose of his star first seeker to the Chicago club with the knowledge that Purtell and Smith for Lord and McConnell trade still left a mild, would cause an ill feeling for Boston to break about the head of the Boston magnate. It was the criticism of the peerless deal of last Summer would seem in comparison as only an April shower.

Tried Hard to Land Stahl.

Charley Comiskey, the owner of the Chicago White Sox, tried every trick in diplomacy known to the game of baseball to land Stahl from President Taylor. He offered time and players galore. If the Boston magnate would give his consent to the trade. But the same spirit still obtains deal with the why Old Roman of Chicago being as the words have it, above the proceedings, and in the end the Comiskey leader failed to get the much coveted player.

Comiskey realized that with Jake Stahl, the very man his White Sox needed above all things, he would have an excellent prospect of labeling the American League pennant. The memory of the 1910 season served as a lesson, and the result is that Jake Stahl will now stay at the receiving window of his father-in-law's bank in the Windy City, and the American League will know him no more in the spheres.

RUSTLERS OUT TO WIN SERIES WITH YANKEES

By R. W. LARDNER.
American Correspondent with the Rustlers on Augusta Tour.

R.W.LARDNER

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 25.—It is the ambition of President Hepburn Russell, Manager Stahl and Tenney and all the boosters Rustlers to win this afternoon's game from the New York Yankees and thus make a clean sweep of the short series. Victory over this American Leaguers, it is safe to say, will make everyone in our party feel that he is leading for the pennant and the Rustlers will be a dis- satisfied if they can't down Hal Chase's crew. Manager Stahl, however, is not one of the past. The deal where John I. Taylor accepted Paddy Purtell and Frank Smith in exchange for Hugh Duffy and Amby McConnell was still too fresh in the mind of the magnate to result of coaxing across another piece of like nature.

Rustlers Pound Quinn.

Still they mixed up their wares in fine style and had the Yankee batsmen guessing.

Both of them used a slow ball with great effect and Rustlers curve broke sole smacks in the first rounds but worked their curve tired of hitting by the time Caldwell was trotted out, and that tall Californian somewhat handcuffed and completely very voyage.

The Yankees started the tallying by earning two runs in their half of the second. With one down, Knight hit safely past Ingerton and scored on Roy Hartzell's long triple between Goode and Miller.

The valuable Walter Blair promptly drove in Hartzell with a safe crack to left. Walter was caught trying to steal and Flynn filed to Miller.

The Rustlers came back in their part and collected three runs and half a dozen hits. Miller whaled one to left and raced around to third when Ingerton's long and high fly fell safe in right centre, Scotty taking two bases.

Bill Sweeney came forward with a clean drive to right on which Doc and Scotty rode home. Manager Tenney was called out on strikes, and Sweeney was caught napping on Graham's grounder escaped Chase and Brown singled, sending Peaches to second.

Clarke let drive another base hit to centre, scoring Graham. Goode beat out a slow one to Knight and Chase shot Jack's throw over to third hoping to catch Russell. The throw was high and got away from Elliott and Brown tried to score but was nipped.

The Yanks came right back and tied it up in the third. One down, Weiter walked and Chase drove to third on Hemphill's hit to right, scoring while Ingerton was throwing out Chase at first.

Boston Outfit Takes Lead.

Then the Rustlers hopped into the lead and stayed there. Herzog was thrown out to Knight, but Meier poled along a three-bagger to right and waltzed in to the music of Ingerton's safe shot past Hartzell.

Tenney opened the fourth with a single over second. Stallon sacrificed and Brown nailed the game down tight by hitting one over Weiter's head for Doc sacks. Hunter stayed on third while Clarke and Goode were dying. That ended the scoring.

The bread battery was broken up at the end of the fifth. Frank supplanting Brown, who was good and the Yanks didn't start batting during The balance of the game.

The Honorable Peter Kelley arrived on the scene, and had charge of the noise to make everybody else. Peter brought with him some ten bats entitled "corkers." They were given down in Tipperary and Tom Lynch to be tried out. They have oak handles and are supposed to be particularly durable for rainy days, for they are guaranteed not to slip in the hands.

Boston Rector at Game.

President Russell had several guests at the game, among them being the Rev. Dr. P. J. Supple, rector of St. John's Church in Roxbury, and Harry F. Nowe, the subway builder and contractor, also of Roxbury.

It was another social event and almost a third of the crowd was made up of Southern and Northern belles. The Yankees are stopping at the Albion, which is also the headquarters of the Rustlers. Last night was devoted to fanning bees. The New Yorkers depart to-night for Atlanta. The score:

ALL OF THE GIANTS SQUADS BREAK CAMP

MARLIN, Tex., March 24.—The Giants have broken camp. Mayor Heffner and a large delegation accompanied the two squads to the tracks, bearing lots of flowers. Rustenborn, Jenkins, Lathaus and Crandall, Hollister, Scheibeck, Becker, Gowdy, Wilson, Schlei, Rudolph, Hendricks, Drake, Tesreau, Nagle and Herzog left on Fort Worth, Devine, Meloras, Murray, Merkle, Fletcher, Doyle, Ames, Marquard, Ames and Shotts.

ATHLETICS DEFEAT CHARLESTON TEAM

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 25.—In a game featured by heavy hitting the Philadelphia Athletics won the second game of the series from the Charleston Southern Atlanta league team, 14 to 1. Russell and Cy Morgan were in the box for the Athletics.

YANKEE HORSES WIN.

PARIS, March 25.—American race horse owners carried off two events at Maisons-Laffitte. The Prix Callistatte, for three-year-olds, valued at $1,000, distance one mile, was won by Frank Gould's Compbourg. Nash Turner's Friand II. captured the Prix de Houdan, a selling event of $600, distance 10½ furlongs.

WHO'S WHO WITH THE RED SOX

No. 6—Jerry Sheehan, Catcher.

"Babe" Sheehan. He likes to be called Jerry, but is too good-natured to resent any nickname. Sheehan grew up on a millionaire farm out in Illinois, and is growing yet. Itingside weight given at 210 pounds, but he is suspected of dieting before weighing in. He is also reported to be heir to great wealth and several counties in Illinois, and Dakota. Jerry is very much interested in Boston Conservatory of Music, in bold. He thinks he'll go to Tech in a year or two because he likes Bostonians so well. He is something of an electrical engineer, having a degree from a western college. He is built on the plan of a steam-roller, and may go into the business of building electrical locomotives. Chief dissipation, aquire orders of food. Favorite sport, smiling.

RUSTLERS BREAK CAMP THURSDAY

AUGUSTA, March 25.—The Rustlers will leave the Augusta camp next Thursday morning. This announcement was made by Secretary Kelley. They will play in Columbia, S. C., next Thursday and Friday afternoon. On Saturday, April 1, they will appear at Greensboro, N. C., and also will spend Sunday there.

Monday, April 3, will find the regulars at Roanoke and the seconds at Danville. On the 4th the two sections will meet again at Richmond, where the first team will face the Richmond Virginia League Club. The Rustlers will play the Northern team on the 5th and the Sunday News aggregation the 6th. There is still uncertainty about the 7th. Nothing has been heard about the engagement in Washington, but it hardly seems possible that McAleer's club will keep it on account of the burning of the stands. If that game is called off, the Rustlers will play at Lynchburg, Va., the 7th and 8th.

They will leave for Baltimore the night of the 8th, spend Sunday in Minneapolis and play the Orioles Monday the 10th. Then they will depart for home on the night of the 11th, and will appear at Lynn, Mass., on the afternoon of the 11th, the day before the season opens.

REDS START RETURN TRIP TO CINCINNATI

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 24.—Clark Griffith and his Cincinnati National League team are to-day bound for Memphis, on the homeward journey, which will be broken for exhibition games at several points. The Pittsburg Pirates again delayed the second team, 7 to 5, in an exhibition game.

DAHLEN SPLITS UP BROOKLYN SQUAD

NASHVILLE, March 24.—Manager Dahlen split up his Brooklyn squad here for the first and last time on their journey North. Dahlen took a squad of twelve players to Chattanooga and Knoxville, and his squad remained behind in Atlanta.

LYNCH TO YANKEES, COMMISSION RULES

CINCINNATI, March 5.—In a decision promulgated to-day the National Baseball Commission disallowed the claim of the Oakland Club of the Pacific Coast League that Manager Norman Lynch had awarded him to the New York American League Club

CHICAGO CUB COLTS BEAT ATLANTA, 9-4

ATLANTA, Ga., March 25.—Manager Frank Chance of the Chicago Nationals put in his Yankees against the Atlanta Southern League team here and the youngsters returned a victory of 9 to 4 by good hitting and base running, and by taking advantage of the errors and wildness of the Atlanta pitchers.

RED SOX QUIT COAST FOR TEXAS TOMORROW

By MERTON E. BURKE.
American Correspondent with Red Sox on "Coast-to-Coast" Tour.

MERTON E. BURKE

LOS ANGELES, March 25.—Joe Wood is the hero of the hour on the coast. The Angelos saw him pitch yesterday in the first game of nine strikeouts, four hits and no runs in six innings, and they tell me that Los Angeles never saw such pitching before. Wood is the star twirler of the Red Sox and certainly gave a good account of himself yesterday. He has more speed than he ever showed before. He shoots the ball over like a cannon shot and his training with the rifle has given him an eye that lands the ball on the bullseye.

Wood is hitting hard, too, handling the willow as if he has a few home runs in mind for the benefit of the Bostonians when he gets in the big game.

Wood's showing is a source of great gratification to Manager Patsy Donovan and he will likely give him another crack on Sunday, when the squad loses their California training days and pull out for Texas.

To-day a great crowd is expected at the game because of the interest aroused by the opening of the season. Last year there was 10 to 0 at the end of the fifth. At the end of the sixth Donovan declared he would call off the game, also because he wanted to give the shut-out Angeles a chance, he put Hall in the box.

Charlie Hall has been on the Coast all Winter, but apparently has not been aiming at the right kind of a mark, for he could not find the plate. The local team found him for a few long hits and others were given free transportation to first.

However, the Angelos could not overcome the big lead the Bostons had and the score of 11 to 4 made it more interesting to the crowd than if the game had been more sharply contested.

The pealing of Lewis, base running of Janvrin and the heavy hitting of nearly the whole Boston team were the features of the game to the management.

Players Clouting the Ball.

Manager Donovan has been concentrating his energies on making the boys hit the ball and apparently they are getting in step.

"It matter how good you play in the outfield, its the hitting that wins games," he says. It would seem that he has the opportunity of which he summed up in a nutshell.

The man who makes a surprising catch gets a hand from the grandstand and a pat of approval from the bleachers. But its the boy who can drive out a hit, a hum hit, who gets the order who rolls in runs.

Gardner, Hooper, Speaker, Lewis, Bradley, Madden and Mahoney all distinguished themselves in one or more hits yesterday and the way they went to the ball would indicate they have profited by Donovan's coaching.

Human Equation in Game.

A lot of people have been cultivating the idea that the Red Sox are due for bumps in the American League this season. Some of the very scientific writers have counted the slope sheets all Winter and figured it out that about fourth or fifth place in the league standing would be very likely.

They're wrong. They may be very good mathematicians, but no doubt they have used up many perfect's good lead pencils figuring out a problem that can't be solved. Figuring you can't figure on paper, and that is the human equation in baseball.

The particular human equation in mind concerns the attitude of the Boston players towards each other. This is a team that is by no means perfect, but its fighting spirit and determination to win is unsurpassed by any club in the league.

Every man on the team is out to help the other fellow. Each player is trying to improving with age. Lewis and Hooper are particularly in evidence in this respect. They are playing better ball than they did before Speaker joined the young second baseman, is also a comer.

Try Out Squeeze Plays.

Bradley, who is playing first base in left, vacant by the great Jake Stahl at first, has been closely watched, and during a couple of days there was guessing as to who should fill the position this season. But within the past few days he has got down to the real goods, better form, has landed on the ball for clean hits, and is catching the ball much more handily.

Donovan is directing his men to try the squeeze play whenever opportunity offers, and Gardner and Speaker made it safe of tries at it. Gardner got away from third in great style, but the first time Speke fouled and the second missed the ball entirely.

"That's a great joke on Gardner," says Speke.

Ed Karger won a joy ride by his home run over left field fence. Some local automobile men provide a car for every man who puts the ball over their adjournment. Mr. Karger made good use of the car, he tells me.

Weather superfine.

Sox Colts Beaten Again.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 25.—The Seals made it over Carrigan's Colts here, trouncing the Boston seconds 9 to 3. Weak pitching was the cause of the downfall.

YANKEES' NEW PARK WILL NOT BE READY

NEW YORK, March 25.—The Yanks will fight out their entire schedule this season upon their old battlefield at One Hundred and Sixty-eighth street and Broadway.

It was at first the hope of Owner Ferrell to have his new plant at Kingsbridge ready for July 4, but obstacles have arisen which make this impossible, so the combined program will be carried through at the same old stand.

The Kingsbridge arena will then be flashed to the best public for the first time at the start of 1912.

SOUTHERN NINE BEATS AMHERST

RALEIGH, N. C., March 25.—The Amherst College team from Massachusetts opened its Southern trip by going down to defeat. Agricultural and Mechanical college did the trick, beating the visitors 5 to 1 by bombing hits at the right time. Pennock, Elliott and Pitts started in the field for Amherst, while Peacock also left with the stick. A fast double by Amherst prevented scoring in the second.

Williams, at first, made two nice pickups and had thrown that preceded Amherst from scoring. Amherst had seven men left on bases in three for the locals.

Vernon had good control but his bunched in two innings beat him. Amherst scored first in the third on Stranben's double, Elliott's sacrifice and Pattenheimer's single.

Agricultural and Mechanical College rose to the occasion in same inning on Seifert's single and Farmer's double. The winning run came in the fifth on Robertson's triple and Seifert's single. The score:

Advertising Sells $8,000,000 of Hosiery

One of the most remarkable tributes to persistent advertising is the recent report of a jobber who handles a line of advertised hosiery. Upon the line is his trade-mark, and his figures show that during the year of 1910 he sold no less than $8,314,237 worth of his trade-marked hosiery.

Suppose he made but 6% on the line, his profit was nearly $500,000. If he made 10% his profit was at least $831,000.

This hosiery is an excellent line and is known by every dry goods merchant in the country. No matter what other lines of hosiery the retail store carries, it has to carry this particular line, because the woman comes in and demands it. The quality is excellent and the advertising is persistent.

If you have a staple line of goods upon which you can put a trade-mark and which you can persistently advertise in the daily newspaper, you can not only force your goods into the stores, but greatly increase your market.

The day is rapidly approaching when the trade-marked line will be the line that retail merchants will desire, because it is a line that will give him the greatest margin of profit. His profit may be small, and is generally upon the gross amount of goods sold. A small profit on quick sales is very much better than a large profit on few sales, and one of the advantages of advertising is that it makes quick sales for the dealer. In fact, many dealers are coming to a point where their clerks are almost machines, simply to hand on the goods which the consumer calls for.

There are many kinds of advertising. Some are better than others. Those who are the best posted on the very complex business of advertising will tell you that newspaper advertising is the quickest to produce returns and the most efficient way to overcome competition. It is very much better to send a salesman in to see a person two or three times a week than it is but once a month. In fact, persistency and frequency of advertising, like persistency in anything else, will produce quicker results than infrequent visits upon a probable customer.

The Boston American has so many features of interest to so many different people that its circulation reaches more of all classes than even the so-called class mediums. In fact, if one should grant, which is only fair, that 10% of the nearly 400,000 circulation of the Boston American is quality circulation, then the class circulation of the Boston American is larger than that of Boston's best-known quality paper.

We would like to give you particulars as to circulation and as to the kind of advertising in the Boston American.

OPEN SPEEDWAY PATRIOTS DAY

Secretary Jesse Eddy of the racing committee of the Metropolitan Driving Club announces the first local programme of the year in the two-heats for the five fastest trotters and five fastest pacers owned by members of the organization, to be raced at the Charles River Speedway, the opening events to be raced upon Patriots Day, April 19, when the club will begin its season.

There will be five meetings and four prizes will be offered in each division, as follows: First, a driving cart; second, a harness; third, a robe, and fourth, a whip. Owners must drive their own horses and must also enjoy a rating as amateur drivers. All races will be half-mile heats.

As a trotting division is now looked as if the starters would be W. J. McDonald's Beaumont, 2:06½; Chauncey Sears's Chase, 2:07¼; Fred Sanborn's Fred C., 2:11¼; Fred C. Carnaby's Tureen, 2:16, and possibly the Haverhill owned trotter, Wilkes Heart, 2:06¼.

Among the pacers are entered W. McDonald's Colee Wilkie, 2:12½, the king of the speedway; Fred H. Bellows's Cafeena, 2:07¾; John W. Coakley's Easter Hare, 2:07½, and Elmer A. Phillips's Reliance, 2:11¾, and one other pacer to be selected.

WRESTLING BOUTS AT SALEM TO-NIGHT

The first of a series of wrestling meets between the teams of the Brookline Gymnasium A. A. and the Salem Y. M. C. A. will be held at Salem to-night, marking the inauguration of a movement on the part of the directors of both organizations to arouse lively interest in the sport.

Five classes at 115, 125, 135, 145 and 158 pounds will contest in the series, competitive events, the winners in each of which will be awarded silver medals.

Professor Baker of the Chelsea Y. M. C. A. will referee the bouts. A return match with Salem at Brookline will be arranged in the near future.

LYNN WILL BATTLE SOMERVILLE Y. M. C. A

The Somerville Y. M. C. A. track team will oppose Lynn Y. M. C. A. in a dual meet at Somerville next Tuesday evening. The events will be: 220-yard dash, 12-pound shotput, three standing broad jumps, potato race and a relay race.

TRAMPLE RIVALS URGES HAUGHTON

"It's time to get to work and improve our efficiency so that we can trample on every team, including Yale, Dartmouth and Princeton. We've got to lick them so they won't be able to lift their heads again for ten years."

This is the advice given by Head Coach Haughton to about seventy-five candidates for the Harvard football eleven at the Harvard Union. Haughton's lecture was full of pointed remarks. Captain Bob Fisher, all-American guard last year, was another speaker.

Here is what Haughton had to say to the candidates:

"Fellows, do you realize that Harvard has not scored a touchdown against Yale since 1901? In ten years we have scored just four points. Not only have we scored only four points, but during these ten years we have been licked every year but last year. It's time to get to work and improve our efficiency so that we can trample on every team, including Yale, Dartmouth and Princeton. We've got to lick 'em so they won't be able to lift their heads again for ten years, and not play so that they can say as they have in past years: 'Well, you did well against Coy's team. This year we'll get the devil take the hindmost.

"Now we're up against Princeton again. Do you know what our record has been against them for the past twenty-four years? They beat us 18, 24, 6, 17, 0, 0, and the next year we beat them. After that until 1907, when we stopped playing them, they beat us every year and knocked the stuffing out of us. We have had one victory against them in the last twenty-four years. That's what we've got to beat about. That's what we have to reckon with when we meet them next Fall, and I can say that it is really a serious opportunity and we have to begin now.

"You will not long be beaten to learn. You think, 'well, there's plenty of time between now and next Fall.' Get busy right away. I'm doing all I can to improve the methods and ways of getting the team into the best shape, but I want to remind you that we have simply got to send our energies to become more skilful players along the lines I have mentioned. That's all I have got to say. Get busy next Monday afternoon and bring your friends with you. That's all. Much obliged."

JOHNNY McGANN, NEW ARMORY MATCHMAKER

Johnny McGann of Cambridge, one of the best known men in the boxing game in this section, has been secured by the Armory Athletic Association as a matchmaker. He will assist in selecting the boxing programs, which is important in itself that the members of the club will from now on see some stellar bouts.

McGann is conversant with all aspects of the game, and is admitted to be one of the best informed men on boxing to-day. He is well-liked not only in Boston, but in all of the other large cities of the country where he has a host of friends.

McGann was matchmaker of the old Cambridge A. A. and his reports of the boxing bouts in that capacity made an enviable reputation. He personally examined the men entering boxers in the country, and enjoys their friendship and esteem.

MIDDLESEX SCHOOL GIVES OUT DATES

Middlesex School will be represented by a strong baseball team this season. The schedule:

April 12, Stone at Middlesex; April 15, Volkmann at Middlesex; April 19, Lawrence Academy at Middlesex; April 22, Worcester Academy at Middlesex; April 26, Groton Academy at Middlesex; April 29, Groton High at Middlesex; May 3, Worcester South High at Worcester; May 6, Worcester South High at Middlesex; May 9, Concord High at Middlesex; May 13, Concord High at Middlesex; May 20, Milton Academy at Middlesex; May 24, March at Southboro; May 27, Stone Brown at Middlesex; May 30, Groton at Middlesex.

YOUNG DYSON WINS BATTLE WITH DUNN

NEW YORK, March 25.—Young Dyson of Providence won another bout here when he defeated Jimmy Dunn in ten fast rounds at the New Polo A. A., Harlem. In the third session the Providence boxer sent Dunn to the canvas and repeated in the fifth round.

BYERS NEW CHAMPION.

AIKEN, S. C., March 25.—E. M. Byers of Pittsburg won the Southern Cross golf trophy from Harold Sands of Boston, 5 up and 3 to play. J. C. Tappin and H. Wilmerding of Massachusetts tied for the consolation cup, after playing thirty-six holes, while Oliver Perrin of New York won the cup for the "beaten eight" in the Southern Cross play.

LEAGUE CHIEF APPEALS.

CHICAGO, March 25.—President Tearney of the Three I. Baseball League said to-day that he would appeal Secretary Farrell's decision to the National Commission. He declared that the decision was "framed."

QUITS DIAMOND FOR BATTLEFIELD

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 25.—According to information from New Orleans, Floyd Kroh, the left handed twirler, secured by the local club toward the close of last season from the Chicago Cubs, has forsaken the Colonels and joined the insurrectos in the Mexican rebellion. Manager Howard has been trying to locate Kroh for some time, and to-day received the above surprising bit of news. The erratic southpaw had been working out with Orozco's recruits in the Crescent city this Spring and was expected to report here in time for the exhibition games with the big league teams, the first of which is scheduled for to-morrow with the Cincinnati Reds. It is said that Kroh is to be rewarded with a Cabinet portfolio if the rebels win.

HOCKEY RIVALS CLASH TONIGHT

Primed for the greatest hockey battle that has taken place in years, the Ottawa team, champions of the world, and the Wanderers of Montreal, challengers for the title, arrived in this city last night and they clash before a crowd that will tax the Ice on Arena.

Each team is confident of victory. The Wanderers, with the benefit of Wednesday night's game to their credit, count on pulling down the big end of the $2,500 purse. What they want, moreover, is the scalp of the Ottawa team for depriving them of owning the Stanley Cup, the big trophy that establishes a team's standing at the top of the professional ranks, not only in Canada, but in the world.

As the total scores made by each team will decide the series of six games, Ottawa has a big task to-night in holding the Wanderers from scoring, while they roll up a handy total for themselves. The Montreal team has the advantage now by the figures, 7 to 5, and according to the experts nothing can defeat the leaders but an unexpected reversal of form.

The Wanderers wanted one more crack at the Ottawas after losing the championship race in Canada during the Winter season, and now that the opportunity is presented are making good, the game to-night deciding where they stand as a team.

The teams are due to cut loose on this important occasion and play a fast, high spectacular game than they did on Wednesday night, as the players have had a chance to recover from the hard contests they had in New York previous to coming here for the windup of their duel.

Hockey as it is played by the professional teams, is far superior to the amateur game, as was evident by the brilliant playing of the Ottawas and Wanderers in the first bat le.

The referee, Lester Patrick, whose name is known throughout Canada, not only as one of the greatest players, but also an official. The professionals recognize the fact that he has played with and against them and they cannot get away with any inside stuff that the rules forbid.

BERT KEYES IS EASY FOR SAMMY SMITH

NEW YORK, March 25.—Young Sammy Smith of Philadelphia had a lot of good boxing exercise with Bert Keyes of New York in a six-round bout at the National Sporting Club. He toyed with Bert and punished him at will, having all the better of the bout.

SPORTS OF ALL SORTS

HUGH DUFFY, MANAGER OF THE Chicago White Sox, has given an unconditional release to Jiggs Donohue, the former first baseman of the team, who was taken to Texas upon the Spring training trip in hopes that he would "come back." Physical ills have so sapped the strength of Jiggs that his days upon the diamond are over. Although the old boy was as game as a red hackle, and had all his old time pepper, still his strength would not permit him to play within a shadow of his form in the old days. Just a word as regards the passing of Jiggs, as good hearted a lad as the game of baseball has ever known. That is of his wonderful work in the world's series between the Chicago White Sox and Cubs in 1906. No such playing of the first bag was probably ever seen before or after, as Jiggs put up in that short series. He was one of the deferred Pay fathers in bringing home the bacon for the White Sox and to this day the South Side fans in Chicago are still singing his praises.

IT IS ESTIMATED THAT THE LOSS to the railroads will be $2,000,000 by the closing of the New York race tracks. They certainly reaped a great harvest from racing patrons for many years, and what some of the railroad magnates have to say of the present situation with the abolishing of the gates were hardly need well to print. And then again the hotels are going to feel a big slice with profits coming right here and that is, that Saratoga will not have the fashionable season this year without the races that has ever been known in the history of the famous Spa.

FROM O'ROURKE OF THE NATIONAL League City of New York, has offered to match Young Herr of Harvard Brooks against Jimmy Walsh of this city for ten-round bout at 147 pounds, and it looks as if little might be an acceptance by Manager Keeler. In the meantime, Walsh is out with a challenge to Freddie Welsh, who is tracked with Abe Attell, at 118 pounds.

THE MARVELOUS WORK OF AINSMITH, the young catcher purchased late last Fall from the Lawrence club by the Washington Americans, continues to be one of the marked features of the Senators' Spring training trip. This new recruit has it going like lines, and the way he can dance the ball about to the infielders is a caution. Manager Griffith has already predicted that Ainsmith will be one of the star performers of the American League this year, and the boy certainly looks the part.

THE ERRAND OF EMIL THIERY, manager of Packey McFarland, who left this city for Cleveland on Wednesday, to arrange a match appears to have been successful. McFarland will meet Phil Brock in a ten-round bout at Akron, O., on April 7, presumably at catchweights. Another trip to Cleveland is booked for Packey, and only a few shakes of the tree needed to bring home the fruit.

THE CANCELLING OF THE BOUT BEtween Frank Klaus and Hugo Kelly, arranged for the Armory A. A. meeting next Tuesday night, comes as no surprise to the fans who saw the Chicago Italian in his recent bout with Bill McKinnon and realized that the clever Western middle weight was but a shadow of his real self, by reason of physical ills. Kelly was suffering greatly from bronchitis while here, and spent much of the time in bed at the Clarendon. He is now much under the weather at his home in Chicago, and it looks as if it would be some time before he would box again.

WITH OVER 1,700 NOMINATIONS received for the Futurity for the colts and fillies of 1911, the success of the stake offered by the American House Breeder of this city, is splendidly assured. Kentucky is as usual the largest nominator with 400 mares in foal. New York second with 250 and Massachusetts third with 222. There are less than 145 mares nominated for the local Futurity who are in foal to Peter the Great, 2:07¼.

Married Life the Second Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

In Which Helen Decides On Revolt and Gives Warren the Surprise of His Life

"HELEN! Helen!" Warren opened the bathroom door a few inches and called out angrily, "Get me a bath towel!"

Helen hurriedly brought a towel and handed it to him.

"Why on earth can't you keep bath towels in the bathroom?" as he slammed the door.

For several moments there was loud splashing of water and then Warren emerged in his bath robe.

"And, why, under heaven don't you get some bath soap? There's a piece in there about the size of a bird's egg. And there's never enough towels. Why don't you look after things better?

Helen did not answer with her usual eager apologies, but said rather coldly:

"I'm sorry the bathroom wasn't in order, but I can't do everything."

"Can't do everything?" he fumed. "Why you've got all day with nothing to do as far as I can see."

"Nothing to do, with the baby and the marketing and the house and Della to look after?"

"Oh, that's nothing. You've got Della to do all the work. You're only to see that she does it."

Helen's Coolness Angered Him

Without answering, Helen rose and was leaving the room when Warren flared out again:

"Here, you've been using my brush! Haven't I told you to leave my brush alone?"

"You shaved by my dresser this morning because the light was better. And when I wanted my brush you said not to come near you. So I used yours." Helen answered still more coldly.

"Well, at least you should have the decency to clean it out."

"I was just doing that when you called for the towels. Then Della called me into the kitchen and I forgot it."

There was something in her cool, quiet indifference to his fuming that was most unusual and disconcerting.

"What's come over you?" he demanded "Aren't you a rather high and mighty lady this morning?"

"No, I think not," quietly.

He Rushed After Her

He was standing before the mirror and now their eyes met in the glass. His were full of angry excitement and hers were quiet and slightly contemptuous. He wheeled around in a frenzy and yet at a loss for any tangible excuse for his rage.

"So you think you are going to carry things with a high hand this morning, eh?"

But Helen had gone out and closed the door. He rushed after her and threw it open.

"That's your method of ending a conversation, is it? Now, you will just listen until I'm through."

"Don't you think you made quite a sufficient spectacle of yourself last night without anything further this morning?"

"Spectacle of myself last night," he roared.

"Yes, when I had invited Mr. Farrel for dinner and you came home half intoxicated and disgraced us both."

"Oh, I did—did I?" he sneered. "And who wanted Farrel here, anyway? I told you he was a darned chump."

"And I told you that Will Farrel and I had been friends since we were children; and I wished him to see my home and my husband. He always wanted to marry me and I was foolish enough to want him to believe I was happy."

"Oh, he wanted to marry you, did he? Well, it's a darned pity he didn't."

"Yes, I think so too, now."

"Oh, you do, do you?" He stepped toward her almost threateningly, the brush still in his hand. "So you wish you'd married him, do you?"

"When you're like this, I think I do," deliberately.

"Well, it may not be too late yet, you know," with concentrated fury. "What do you say to that—eh?"

"What would you like for me to say?"

His Rage Was Beyond Words

Here his rage at her coolness was beyond words. He could only clench his teeth and glare at her. Whatever expression his wrath might have found was averted by Della's appearing with the announcement:

"There's something the matter with the range." And Helen followed her out into the kitchen.

With a muttered oath Warren turned back into his room and dished dressing with unwonted haste, scowling fiercely all the while.

Then he grabbed up his hat and coat and, without waiting for his breakfast, slammed out of the apartment.

The Man Who's Afraid of Women

By DOROTHY DIX

I HAVE received a very illiterate and indignant letter from a man who says he is violently opposed to "woman's suffrage" because it makes him mad clear through to think of a woman ever holding a good paying office, when there are so many men office seekers. Then my correspondent asks:

"Do you ever think of the children that are starving because you have got a job that some man ought to have?"

Well, no, Mr. Man. I cannot truly say that I've ever thought of myself as one who snatches the bread out of little children's mouths; but I do think sometimes with thankfulness that I am able to do it—of several people into whose mouths I do put bread, and even occasionally a little cake.

Now, in my turn, I want to ask a question of this man, and all others who grow furious at the thought of a woman being able to draw down a respectable pay envelope, and this is what I want to know:

"On your honor, did you ever know a single, solitary working woman who wasn't helping somebody else with what she earned? Did you ever know any working woman who had a family who wasn't helping to support it?"

The Help of the Hopeless

I never have known of a single case of a woman who was a money earner who did not give with both hands to those who were dependent upon her. Always there are a lot of helpless hands clutching at the working woman's petticoats, and she never takes them off. She dishes with them to the last penny.

Because women are more sympathetic, more tender hearted; because they have felt the sting of want and poverty more than a man does, they are much quicker to answer the calls for money made upon them than men are.

If you will investigate, you will find that in any poor family where the sons and daughters both work, that the girls, although they earn less, contribute far more to the family expenses than the boys do.

The boys will give their mother a small part of their salaries every week; but the girls turn over the whole amount that they earn to her. It is the girls who buy better furniture for the house, who see that mother has a new dress, and father a warm overcoat—not the boys, who are spending their money on having a good time themselves.

All of us know old maids who sacrificed their youth and beauty, and their opportunities of homes, and children of their own, because an old father and mother had no other support than the money they earned; or they were putting a brilliant young brother through college, or giving a pretty sister the chances in life she needed; or, perhaps, but for them, some little orphan nieces and nephews would have to be sent to an asylum.

Whom the Women Aid

Ask any working woman you please what she does with her money. She will tell you that she has a sick husband to support, or little children, or a feeble old mother or father, or that her sister's husband doesn't get along and she helps out with the rent money every month, or that she pays the board somewhere for an old aunt or cousin.

There is always somebody that she is dividing her earnings with, however meagre they may be; somebody for whom she is denying and sacrificing herself; somebody for whom she is working.

If, to-morrow, every woman who follows a gainful occupation were ousted from her job, and the job given to a man, as my correspondent desires, there wouldn't be enough orphan asylums, and old people's homes, and blind and deaf and dumb institutions, and hospitals in this land to hold the hordes of helpless and afflicted people, now supported by women, who would be thrown out upon the world for sanctuary.

That is what makes so unjust and so cruel the cry against the working woman, that she takes the place of a man, and should be ashamed of herself! Just as many working women support families as working men do.

Of course, as a matter of fact, a woman has got as good a right to work and to earn an honest living as a man has, and there is no more reason why a man should object to a woman having the situation in an office or business that he covets than he should object to another man having it.

Life owes each of us just exactly what we have the brains and the industry to collect from it, and because an individual happens to be born of the female persuasion does not invalidate her claim.

A Contemptible Excuse

There is something peculiarly contemptible and cowardly in the spectacle of a big husky man who is afraid to compete with a woman, and who, to save his job, takes refuge in the baby act and demands that women shall be shut out of gainful occupations, because, if they are permitted to work, they will fill positions that some man could like to have.

But the man who wants to rid the business world of women's services will have to find some better battle cry than that one that she has a sick husband to support, or little children, or a feeble old mother or father, or that her sister's husband doesn't get along and she helps out with the rent money every month, or that she pays the board somewhere for an old aunt or cousin.

There is always somebody that she is dividing her earnings with, however meagre they may be; somebody for whom she is denying and sacrificing herself; somebody for whom she is working.

If, to-morrow, every woman who follows a gainful occupation were ousted from her job, and the job given to a man, as my correspondent desires, there wouldn't be enough orphan asylums, and old people's homes, and blind and deaf and dumb institutions, and hospitals in this land to hold the hordes of helpless and afflicted people, now supported by women, who would be thrown out upon the world for sanctuary.

That is what makes so unjust and so cruel the cry against the working woman, that she takes the place of a man, and should be ashamed of herself! Just as many working women support families as working men do.

Of course, as a matter of fact, a woman has got as good a right to work and to earn an honest living as a man has, and there is no more reason why a man should object to a woman having the situation in

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

LET THEM KEEP THE RINGS

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been going with a young man for the past three years, during which time I have not bothered with any other fellows, although I know several. He claims to think a great deal of me, and says I am not sincere because I do not trust him.

This young man gave a girl, whom I know, a ring for her birthday, which I heard of and asked him why he did so if he was going with me. His answer was that he did so for her mother's sake. She used to give him his meals twice a week, or whenever he happened to be in her house collecting rents, and he felt that he should recompense her in some manner. But the daughter and mother also took this in a more serious light.

Also, on Christmas Eve, he gave another young lady, whose mother is a janitress in one of his houses, a ring, merely because she gave him a box of cigars. I say this is terribly wrong, and that they can cast it up any time.

I want him to go or write to both of these young girls, explain the situation, and request that they mail the rings back to him. In no other way will I continue to go with such a fellow who bestows gifts upon several girls. He thinks I am jealous, and said if he cannot have my love without making such a bargain, which he calls buying my affection by getting the rings back, I am not sincere.

Now, should he go to these girls and get the rings back, or should I let him go?

I love him with all my heart, but will willingly give him up rather than have matters worse hereafter, which I think can happen as a result of affairs.

K. M. G. R.

HE need not have given the ring to ex-change for a box of cigars; nor need he have given the other girl a ring for her mother's sake.

If the mother was so good to him, he should have made the gift to her—not to her daughter.

At the same time, I think you make a mistake in forcing him to request the return of his gifts. It is enough that he frees up going to see them, which, of course, he should do.

Take my advice and be content with asking him to make no more gifts and to give up calling on those girls. If he continues his indiscriminate gift-making, break your friendship.

HOW MUCH TO MARRY ON

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Kindly let me know how much salary per week a man should be earning before he asks a girl who is earning $18 a week to be his wife. What is your opinion?

ADVICE SEEKER.

UNLESS he is earning more than she does. I do not think he should ask her to marry him.

No More Wrinkles
BEAUTIFUL BUST

Superfluous Hair Vanishes Like Magic by a New Discovery

Any woman who wishes to beauty bust, which Madame Campbell has given to thousands of women, can obtain the information by writing to her at 1265 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill., and she will send absolutely free to the readers of this paper her book on how to develop the bust; how to remove wrinkles; how to remove crows feet and frown lines; how to remove blackheads, pimples and freckles; how to remove dark circles under the eyes; how to quickly remove double chin; how to build up sunken cheeks and add flesh to the body; how to prevent gray hair and stop hair falling; how to stop forever heartburn, indigestion, constipation and sick headache. Madame Campbell's address is 1265 Michigan St., Chicago, Ill., and don't send any money, because your means are free, as this charming woman is doing her utmost to help as many women as possible in need of secret information which will add to their beauty and make life sweeter and lovelier in every way.

A Curtain Hint

IF lace or net curtains are not too much soiled they can be nicely freshened by taking down and putting them away for several days, or at least over night in plenty of French chalk.

See that all of the curtain is thickly covered, with extra amount on badly soiled spots. Keep in the dark in a trunk or closed shelf.

When ready to use shake out the chalk lightly without stretching the curtain and it will be as clean as though washed. Many housekeepers put their curtains away in French chalk between seasons and find them clean when ready for use once more.

The Mystery of the "Villa Rose"

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written. By A. E. W. Mason. Copyright, 1909, 1910, by A. E. W. Mason

CHAPTER XIX.—(Continued)

SUE pointed to the recess; her voice rang with contempt. Wethermill stiffened across the room like a drunkard and picked up the key in trembling fingers. Celia heard it turn in the lock, and the other bang. Wethermill had gone upstairs.

Celia leaned back, her heart fainting within her. Arranged! It was her turn now. She was to be "arranged." She had no doubt what sinister meaning that innocent word concealed. The dry, choking sound, the horrid scuffling of feet upon the floor, were in her ears. And it had taken so long—so terribly long!

She heard the door open again and shut again. Then steps approaching the recess. The curtains were flung back, and the two women stood in front of her—the tall Adele Rossignol with her read hair and her coarse good looks and her sapphire dress and the hard-featured sallow maid. The maid was carrying Celia's white coat. They did not mean to murder her, then. They meant to take her away, and even in a spark of hope lit up the girl's bosom. For even with her illusions crushed she still clung to life with all the passion of her young soul.

The two women stood and looked at her; and then Adele Rossignol burst out laughing. Vaquier approached the girl, and Celia had a moment's hope that she meant to free her altogether, but she only loosened the cords which fixed her to the pillar and the high stool.

"Mademoiselle will pardon me for laughing," said Adele Rossignol politely; "but it was mademoiselle who invited me to try my hand. And really, for so smart a young lady, mademoiselle looks so ridiculous."

She lifted the girl up and carried her back writhing and struggling into the salon.

The whole of the pretty room was within view, but to the embrasure of a window something lay dreadfully still and quiet.

Celia held her head averted. But it was there, and, though it was there, all the while the women joked and laughed, Adele Rossignol feverishly, Helene Vaquier with a real glee almost horrible to see.

Helene's Mockery

"I beg mademoiselle not to listen to what Adele is saying," exclaimed Helene. And she began to ape in a mincing, extravagant fashion the manner of a saleswoman in a shop. "Mademoiselle has never looked so ravishing. This style is the last word of fashion. It is what there is of most chic.

"Of course, mademoiselle understands that the costume is not intended for playing the piano. Not, indeed, for the ballroom. It leaps to one's eyes that dancing would be difficult. Nor is it intended for much conversation. It is a costume for a mood of quiet reflection. But I assure mademoiselle that for pretty young ladies who are the favorites of rich old women it is the style most recommended by the criminal classes."

All the woman's bitter rancour against Celia, hidden for months beneath a mask of humility, burst out and ran riot now. She went to Adele Rossignol's help, and they flung the girl face downward upon the sofa. Her face struck the cushion at one end, her feet the cushion at the other. The breath was struck out of her body. She lay with her bosom heaving.

Helene Vaquier watched her for a moment with a grin, paying herself now for her respectful speeches and attendances.

"Yes, be quiet; and reflect, little fool!" she said savagely. "Were you wise to come here and interfere with Helene Vaquier? Hadn't you better have stayed and danced in your rags at Montmartre? Are the smart frocks and the pretty hats and the good dinners worth the price? Ask yourself these questions, my dainty little friend!"

She drew up a chair to Celia's side and sat down upon it comfortably.

The Woman's Awful Threat

"I will tell you what we are going to do with you, Mlle. Celie. Adele Rossignol and that kind gentleman, M. Wethermill, are going to take you away with them. You will be glad to go, won't you, dearie? For you love M. Wethermill, don't you? Oh, they won't keep you long enough for you to get tired of them. Do not fear!

"But you will not come back, Mlle. Celie. No; you have seen too much to-night. And every one will think that Mlle. Celie believed in murder and ooh her benefactress. They are certain to suspect some one; so why not you, pretty one?"

Celia made no movement. She lay trying to believe that no crime had been committed, that that lifeless body did not lie against the wall. And then she heard in the room above a bed wheeled roughly from its place.

The two women heard it, too, and looked at one another.

"It is the safe," said Vaquier. "Go and see what he is doing."

And Adele Rossignol ran from the room.

As soon as she was gone Vaquier followed to the road. listened, closed it gently and came back. She stooped down.

"Mlle. Celie," she said, in a smooth silky voice, which terrified the girl more than her harsh tones, "there is just one thing wrong in your appearance, one tiny little piece of bad taste, if mademoiselle will pardon a poor servant the expression. I did not mention it before Adele Rossignol; she is so severe in her criticism, is she not?

"But you see we are alone I will presume to point out to mademoiselle that those diamond eardrops which I see peeping out under the scarf are a little ostentatious to her present circumstances. They are a provocation to thieves. Will mademoiselle permit me to remove them?"

She caught her by the neck and lifted her up. She pushed the lace scarf up at the side of Celia's head. Celia began to struggle furiously, convulsively. She kicked and writhed, and a little tearing sound was heard. One of her loose buckles had caught in the thin silk covering of the cushion and slit it.

Desperate Desmond

CURSES! THIS LIGHTHOUSE FROM FIRE. TELL FOR, THEY SHALL HAVE NO MORE ASSASSINATIONS!
IF YOU ATTEMPT TO LEAVE THAT BURNING LIGHTHOUSE, I WILL SHOOT YOU DOWN, DESMOND!
CURSES! THE BURNING TIMBER IS FALLING
THEY ARE WHALES, NOT ROCKS! THE FIRE IS OUT
DESMOND IS THROWING OUT TROUT TO THE WHALES!
THIS WOULD LUNCH
HORRORS!
HOW TO STEAK RESPONSE
FAREWELL CLAUDE HERO!
YOU WON'T MARRY ME EH? THIS EXPERIMENT WITH A TRUE BORNEO!
DIE! YOU ALL!

Well, it looks as if here is where we're going to bid Desmond good-by. He has a choice of remaining on the lighthouse rock and being burned to death or jumping into the water and being shot by Claude Eclaire. What would you do in a case like that? As for us, we'd jump and take a chance on Claude's missing us.

What's the matter with the villain? Has he lost his nerve? It's certain death to stay on where he is. Doesn't he know that Claude's aim is so poor that he couldn't hit the side of a barn if he was inside of it? Not that we care if the cur gets killed, but we hate to see a man get cold feet, even if he is a crook.

The object which you thought was a rock sticking up out of the water in the first and second pictures is really one of a school of pet whales which the lighthouse keeper has been in the habit of feeding every day. The bread-crumbs from the burning lighthouse fall on them, and they instinctively begin to spout streams of water at the fire.

Now that the whales have extinguished the fire, Desmond is perfectly safe, and you'd think he'd be satisfied, but he isn't. He's never happy unless he has Claude or Rosamond, or both of them, in his power. Before he does anything else, however, he rewards those dear, kind whales by throwing them the keeper's lunch.

It seems we had the wrong dope on that last picture. We might have known the cur wouldn't come a boat. You can't ever right near Claude's boat, so that when the whales go after it they upset the frail craft and spill its occupants into the sea.

Once more gentle Rosamond is in the villain's power. He has brought her back to Borneo and persuaded his friends, the wild men, to fix up another torture stunt. They're going to feed our fair heroine to their giant spider. We can't think of the Latin name of the insect just at present, but we may remember it in time for Rosalyn's pictures.

She Has a Way

By KENNETT HARRIS

SHE'S not a raving beauty, I'll admit;
Her features are not regular at all;
Her dresses are not much on style or fit;
She also she wears in shoes is not so small.
But I'm a steady caller, seven evenings in the week;
I'm quite a little daffy on the lady, so to speak.
It isn't that she's lovely: that would be too much to say.
The fetching thing about her is she has a little way.

She hasn't any money—not a cent.
She isn't even in the social swim.
Her daddy has to dig to pay the rent,
And I can guess the living's pretty slim.
But she can hold her head up with the best that I have seen.
She's working at a counter, but you bet that she's a queen.
She's always sweet and pleasant, but you mustn't get too gay.
I don't say that she'll throw things, but she has a little way.

She doesn't run so terribly to mind.
Her conversation isn't very deep,
And in some certain matters you will find
This laughing little lady knows a heap.
She knows she's got me going and she knows I like to go;
She knows that I am helpless, or she wouldn't treat me so;
She winds me round her finger, I'm a dab of potter's clay,
I bet that she's clever, but she has a little way.

To-day's Best Story

MAYOR MARSHALL of Columbus told this story at a Republican banquet:

"A teacher said to her class:

"'Who was the first man?'

"'George Washington,' a little boy shouted promptly.

"'How do you make out that George Washington was the first man?' said the teacher, smiling indulgently.

"'Because,' said the little boy, 'he was first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen.'

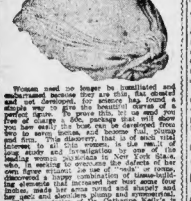
"But at this point a larger boy held up his hand.

"'Well, said the teacher to him, 'who do you think was the first man?'

"'I don't know what his name was,' said the large boy, 'but I know it wasn't George Washington, ma'am, because the history book says George Washington married a widow, so, of course, there must have been a man ahead of him.'"

Develop Your Bust

50c. Package FREE to Any Woman Who Wants a Beautiful Figure.



Women need no longer be humiliated and embarrassed because they are thin, flat, dimpled and not developed, for science has found a simple way to give the beautiful curves of perfect figure. To prove this, let us send you free of charge a 50c. package that will show you how easily the bust can be developed from two to seven inches, and how the figure can be rounded out and filled in all over. This discovery, that is of vital interest to all thin women, is the result of long study and investigation by one of the most noted specialists in New York State, who, in seeking to overcome the defects of her own figure without the use of "pads" or cosmetics, discovered a proper system of home-building elements that increased her bust some four inches, made her arms round and shapely and her neck and shoulders plump and symmetrical. This preparation is known as DR. KELLY'S DEVE-OFER. It is a real discovery for the thin lines from the use of this remarkable developing treatment, and the results are almost instantaneous.

Dr. Kelly not only gained a beautiful form by his own prescription, but now is successfully with many of her patients. Women, this is a splendid opportunity to secure a physician of your own sex, and all we ask is for you to write us for an opportunity to show you without cost what DEVE-OFER will do for you. Tell us your height, weight and present bust measure and we will send you a perfect figure blank (also complexion and hair chart) that will help you develop the natural beauty. Send the little coupon below and 10c. for expenses and a 50c. treatment will be mailed in plain wrapper. Write us today. DR. KELLY MEDICAL CO., 50 C. E., Buffalo, N. Y.

A Passepartout Tea Party

WHEN one of the members of a debutante group sent out cards for an informal afternoon tea she wrote on them Passepartout Tea without explaining what form the merrymaking would take other than to say drinking, and what part passepartouting would play in it.

The girls found the parlor table set forth with a quantity of pretty prints selected from the old masters, art photographs, etc., with shears, library paste, counts, glass, and passepartout tape in different colors.

All drew around the table, and guests were asked to choose the pictures they liked and to passepartout them according to fancy. An hour passed in this agreeable sport, after which the three or four pictures prepared by each fair maid were exhibited and all voted for the exhibit which was considered happiest.

A prize, which took the form of a pocket study of one of the old masters, was the reward, but furthermore such girl was invited to retain each of her exhibits as she liked.

After the awarding of the prizes a dainty tea followed, the idea of the occasion being lavishly used in many little ways. For instance, the napkin rings were bound into cylinders with strips of passepartouting tape, and for place cards tiny glasses from mussed photographic negatives of a very small-sized cabinet had been washed and employed to passepartout dainty pictures clipped from magazines. Each picture had the name of some girl and a jingle relating to her written upon it, the pictures chosen appropriately.

The House With No Address

A Story of Love and Tragedy, by E. Nesbit. Copyright by Doubleday, Page and Company

CHAPTER V.—(Continued)

AT East Peckham she said. "Can you get at your watch? I think it must be one-ish. The doctor's at home between one and two."

The hour was propitious.

"Thank you a thousand times," he said, and "Good-by," he said, too, for indeed he seemed to have come to a point where nothing else was possible to say.

"Good-by? Nonsense!" she said. "Do you think I'm going to abandon my only cause? I took the First, the Injuries to the Aided course—and you're the first chance I've had of showing off. Of course I'm coming with you to the doctor. Or if you don't feel up to it, I'll fetch him to you here."

"Of course I'm up to it," he said, "but it's not fair to trouble you."

Nothing but the banal jibes to the lips at life's great moments.

With perfect self-possession she helped him out of the boat and made him lean on her arm. She had turned down the Panama so that it shaded and almost concealed her face. As they passed the Rose and Crown she stopped.

"Brandy, of course," she said—cogged him into the hot little sitting room behind the geraniums, ordered "Some brandy, please," and saw that he drank it.

"Won't Your Wife Come?"

At the doctor's she waited by the gate while he went in and had lint and bandages put on his hand and his fingers strapped together. The doctor untied the blood-stained wrapping, Templar noticed that they were long strips of soft white stuff edged with lace.

"Won't your wife come in?" the doctor said, glancing out through the window.

"Oh, that's all right," said Templar confusedly.

Presently she had got him back to the boat. They had hardly spoken at all.

"Now," she said, "where do you want to go? Were you trying to get to Tonbridge?"

"Tomorrow would do for Tonbridge," said Templar deceitfully.

"Then shall I pull you down the river?"

"I say, you are most awfully good," he said.

"Nonsense," she said impatiently: "Of course I can't leave you stranded with a boat. Shall I get a man to pull you back to—to wherever you came from?"

"Of course Templar could have quite well have got a man from the Rose and Crown or elsewhere, but he didn't say so.

"Come," she said, "here are the boats. What are you going to do?"

Then he became suddenly brave. "What are you going to do?"

"Find a shady place by the river and have lunch. But there's plenty of time for that."

"I was going to have lunch by the river, too."

She looked at him, appraising him. Already he was endeared to her by the fact that she had done a lot of things for him. Among others, she had touched blood, which she feared and hated.

The day was fair—and life was dull in the Tower with the Dragon, the Eagle and the Lion. And was one never to exchange two words with any one but those three? A steadfast purpose is all very well, but one must have a holiday sometimes.

She had never had just this sort of holiday. He was looking as imploring as he dared. And she decided that he looked rather nice.

"You've been so kind," he said. "And I've been such an idiot."

She understood that he was asking for time to show her that he was not always dropping crowbars and pinching his fingers and saying damn and blinking. And she felt that she herself would have wanted the same chance had she perpetrated the same follies.

So she laughed. "Oh, very well—come along then," she said.

"I'll pull you up to Oak Weir again—if you can stand the tragic associations. And you shall tell me your name and station, and we'll proceed with the day together.

He went back to the Anchor to review and revise his impressions of women, and to bear the pain, which increased, of his hurt hand.

She went home.

Home was the Wood House, not fifty yards from East Lock, where Miss Alexandra Mundy lived with her aunt and cousin. The cousin was unfortunately deformed, so they received no company and returned no calls.

They spent a good deal of time in town, going to the theatre and so on, local drawing-room gossip understood. Very quiet people, quite respectable. Rich, too, but kept themselves to themselves. The cousin's affliction, no doubt.

But the girl was odd, too—about alone all day long on the river. Probably half witted, like the boy. One or other of them played the flute or the violin. You could hear it over the high wall of their garden. In brief, very queer people, my dear; something mentally defective, you may depend.

The people in the poor scattered cottages knew better. To them, as to the Dragon, the Eagle and the Lion, Sandra was a princess.

* * * * * * *

"Well, are you rested, love?" the aunt, who was also the Dragon, asked when supper was over, and Sandra had wandered out into the starlight. "You've had four days, alone all day."

"I must have had four days more," said Sandra happily. "Has anything happened?"

"Nothing. We had been in the garden and Denny played."

"Something has happened," said Sandra with sudden conviction. "You look so queer. You'd better tell me now."

"It's nothing much, dear."

"Tell me at once."

"Yes, dearest. It's that man. He's found us out, just as I always said he would, and wants money. I knew he would some day."

"You didn't. You said you were certain he was dead," said Sandra, white and fierce.

"Oh, what does it matter when I said? He isn't, and now everything's spoiled."

"Tell me all about it," said the girl, quite gentle now.

"He came here this morning. I opened the door. He asked for you. And then I recognized him and told him you didn't live here. But he recognized me, too. And he says, he knew, he knew! I said you'd send him a hundred pounds. It's the only way, love. When you've made your money we'll go right away and hide somewhere where he can't find us."

"There isn't anywhere where he can't find us," said Sandra, dully. "I've always known that."

Suddenly she caught the Dragon's arms above the elbows.

To be continued Monday.

The Cloud Closes In

"It's only—It's what I've always been afraid of."

"You—?"

"Yes, dearest. It's that man. He's found us out, just as I always said he would, and wants money. I knew he would some day."

"You didn't. You said you were certain he was dead," said Sandra, white and fierce.

"Oh, what does it matter when I said? He isn't, and now everything's spoiled."

Metaphysics and the Whiners

By HARYOT HOLT DEY

METAPHYSICS is becoming such a power in the metropolis it is no wonder the Medical Society is taking action. Some call it New Thought; some call it Mental Science; some call it Christian Science; some call it Heart Culture; but it's all metaphysics—the science of thought. It is carrying the meat eaters into vegetarianism; it is trying to chest the doctor out of a living, and the opticians states that so many people are now opposed to glasses that he has had to lower his prices.

It is now a common sight to see people in subway, surface and elevated trains sitting with closed eyes during the entire trip. Every one doesn't know it yet, but it is true that the students of metaphysics take this particular time to "go into the silence," as they call it. This means that they are busy deciding mentally conditions that to the ordinary eye seem to exist, but which they claim are merely the result of disturbed and discordant mental processes. "It's all a thought world which we live in," says the metaphysician, "and I can prove it."

The uninitiated claim that when your illnesses are heeled mentally, it's a sure sign that there was nothing the matter with you. Whether this be true or not, the fact remains that it is not so much the fashion to whine, complain and grouch about your ind feelings as it used to be. It is beginning to sound kind of ignorant, and you are at least not encouraged. You instinctively do not tell your letters with accounts of your illness of three weeks ago. You try to forget it. Nor do you hold up your friends to regale them with it. Even the stories of your appendix are not so popular as they were.

If metaphysics, or New Thought or whatever you choose to name it, can call a halt on the whining, it must be a pretty good thing. Some families are composed of whiners. They are not listed in the city directory under that name, but they are all there just the same. If all the whiners went into the directory the W's would take up about three-quarters of the whole volume. If they should move out of town the city would be well nigh depopulated.

You know the whiners! They tell you how they didn't sleep last night and how they heard the clock strike every hour and how the cats in the next yard kept them awake and how dogs in the near block barked. The whiners always have a harder time than anybody. They are on a special diet; they forget to mail their letters, they have indigestion, their shoes pinch, their legs ache, they have rheumatism, they have to sit in a draught; or they have trouble with servants, or the man who owes them money won't pay it; then they have trouble with phonographs, or somebody borrows their books and their umbrellas, or uses their phone, or they are sure they have chronic appendicitis; they are so sensitive, and they hate vermin, and they are afraid of germs and microbes and bacteria.

What the whiners can't get your ear to tell you all about their hard luck, they they call you on the phone. If they can't get you on the phone, they send you an account of their miseries by special delivery. Trust the whiners to get the details into your hands through the mails, so you can know exactly how wretched they are! It takes the whiners to analyze the psychological moments, interpret dreams and forecast hard luck. And the weather—certain that when at the long day's end they parted, it was on the straightforward, sensible understanding that they were to meet next morning by Stoneham Lock, each with a lunch-basket, at 10 o'clock sharp, and spend the day together.

He went back to the Anchor to review and revise his impressions of women, and to bear the pain, which increased, of his hurt hand.

She went home.

Home was the Wood House, not fifty yards from East Lock, where Miss Alexandra Mundy lived with her aunt and cousin. The cousin was unfortunately deformed, so they received no company and returned no calls.

They spent a good deal of time in town, going to the theatre and so on, local drawing-room gossip understood. Very quiet people, quite respectable. Rich, too, but kept themselves to themselves. The cousin's affliction, no doubt.

But the girl was odd, too—about alone all day long on the river. Probably half witted, like the boy. One or other of them played the flute or the violin. You could hear it over the high wall of their garden. In brief, very queer people, my dear; something mentally defective, you may depend.

The people in the poor scattered cottages knew better. To them, as to the Dragon, the Eagle and the Lion, Sandra was a princess.

* * * * * * *

"Well, are you rested, love?" the aunt, who was also the Dragon, asked when supper was over, and Sandra had wandered out into the starlight. "You've had four days, alone all day."

"I must have had four days more," said Sandra happily. "Has anything happened?"

"Nothing. We had been in the garden and Denny played."

"Something has happened," said Sandra with sudden conviction. "You look so queer. You'd better tell me now."

'CITY MUST OWN WATERFRONT'

"Search has does very little to develop this port; the state must do something for herself. The State spent several hundred thousand dollars in building the Commonwealth pier and they have stood idle for years. The State never took the trouble to dredge between the edge of the piers and the channel right out to sea. The city or the State should undertake to dredge the waterfront."

This was the keynote of the address delivered by Timothy E. Byrnes, Vice-president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford and the Boston & Maine railroads, to the members of the Commercial Club. The meeting was held at the Algonquin Club.

"Personally," Mr. Byrnes went on, "I believe the waterfront should be owned entirely by the State or city. If the State or the city is not going to carry on that development they should be compelled to carry on. The steamship people say facilities are entirely inadequate, and if they had larger facilities they could largely increase the business of Boston. Why should we not have them? We have the capital and the enterprise, and all we require for that development is that legislation be in authority with the foresight and grasp of possibilities should represent the public and lead the way.

"The one thing that New England needs more than any other is to have a rate as possible upon its raw material. If it can get its raw materials brought to New England so cheaply as its competitors can have the material conveyed to them, then New England will prosper. I think there never was a time when New England presented so many encouraging features for its industry as it does to-day. Opportunities are better here, taking all things into consideration, than they are anywhere else.

Frederick P. Fish, president of the Commercial Club, urged the importance of cooperation between the public and the railroads.

"We must," he said, "find some way in which railroads may be protected and encouraged to give the public what it needs. On the other hand, it is important for the railroads to recognize the situation as to-day and the duty that they owe the community."

BONFIRE STARTS A $1,000,000 BLAZE

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 25.—The main warehouse of the Tyler Lumber Company was totally destroyed by fire early to-day and several nearby houses were damaged. The total loss is nearly $1,000,000. Sparks were blown by the strong wind and for a time threatened to spread to apartment houses within a block of the warehouse. A bonfire built by boys is said to have been responsible for the blaze.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Grape fruit is more plentiful and of better quality at present than ever before in the Boston market. Fruit stands and corner groceries abound in splendid specimens of this fruit at prices ranging from two to six for a quarter. Recent experiments in hybridizing the grape fruit have resulted in the production of a sweeter and milder fruit and added to its popularity.

Dairy products are cheaper to-day than they have been in recent years. The supply does not seem to be extraordinary, but the speculators are not putting up much in storage. Good Western butter retails as low as 25 cents a pound. Eastern creamery butter sells for 25 to 26 cents at wholesale. Fresh laid eggs from nearby henneries sell at wholesale as low as 22 cents a dozen. Cheese and milk are lower than they have been in many years.

There is considerable native celery in storage and it brings a much higher price than the California celery, which is coming into the Eastern markets in large quantities.

Potatoes are dirt cheap, as they have been at any time for the last crop was harvested. The wholesale price is 65 to 75 cents per bag of two bushels at wholesale. New Bermuda potatoes are coming in and the price is about the same as in former years at this season, ranging from $2.50 to $3 a bushel.

Apples are very scarce and high. Almost the only kind of Baldwins sell for $5 a barrel, and good ones bring $7 a barrel at wholesale.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS

DULL DAY IN STOCK MARKET

STATE STREET, March 25.—Closing. After one of the dullest day's trading yet recorded on the Boston Curb Exchange, the New York market closed dull but fairly steady, the day's transactions showing an average decline of one-sixteenth of a point.

Apprehension of disturbance over Sunday on account of the Mexican situation was the chief bear argument against trading during the first hour. But later a steadier tone developed, because brokers who sold for important banking interests had plenty of buying orders in the way to get at prices slightly under to-day's. Though most of the speculative traders are bearish, they are not supporting stocks on either side.

Missouri Pacific was used to no effort to depress the list and declined over a point, but was later supported and closed with a loss of ½ point. On the local board railroad stocks were the feature on buying of tax-exempts to April 1.

Bid for Mahie opened at 117½, on a sale of a few shares. It underscored a good authority that it will take $100,000,000 to refund the maturing issues of April, while the amount of money which will be required on the property is due next five years seems large, the final effect will be to greatly enhance the value of the property.

The market for copper shares is disappointing. It is felt, however, that copper shares will soon follow more closely the trend of the general market and not the metal market.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

If testimony was wanted to show that the Rockefeller and Morgan interests were working together it was supplied by their action in the passing of control of the National Bank of Commerce.

$ $ $

What is said to be Rockefeller buying is reported in various stocks, but outside of Consolidated Gas it is not apparent. Possibly the interests which sold Consolidated Gas are picking up Amalgamated Copper, although this is not certain by any means.

$ $ $

Because of the stirring regarding the Supreme court decisions there has been comparatively little speculating, a distinction shown to take on the majority of the industrial issues. Utilities and rails continue to strike from a fear that these stocks will be the next to be hurt as a hope that they may be purchased below the prevailing prices.

$ $ $

The National Bank of Commerce deal is a further concentration of the banking power of New York city. It makes four men absolute dictators of the money and credit of the country. It explains very largely the recent stagnation in the stock market, for it is almost impossible to deal to even a thousand shares of the most popularity of the dealer going to headquarters. Unofficial goods are offered in the stock market and individual trading is negligible. Buying on any large scale will be unless the big people are willing. This latter, getting hold of stock, however, is unfortunate, because it will be almost certain to precipitate an investigation by the New York city national banks by the Democratic Congress preparing to meet extra session. Such an investigation would probably go back to the days of the panic of 1907.

$ $ $

Banking circles had reports from Paris yesterday that Atchison and American Telephone & Telegraph stock would be listed on the Parquet in the near future. Negotiations having been opened by Philadelphia Company stock. Telephone stock is one of the most substantial of the industrials and is in higher favor among investors than among speculators, its live management has been made Western Union a popular issue. Earnings of the Keystone disclose the luxury that silence is golden.

$ $ $

Its recent earnings appear to indicate that the Missouri, Kansas & Texas has finally turned the corner and will show a surplusage for its stock. For the first seven months of the current fiscal year the road has earned a balance for the preferred stock of $2,014,000, equal to 4.3 per cent on the $13,000,000 outstanding, whereas the corresponding balance a year ago was $1,083,816, equal to 12.9 per cent. Increased earnings have also been the rule of the 4 per cent. dividend being paid on the common, the balances equal 2.7 per cent. and 2.2 per cent. respectively on the $45,300,000 common stock outstanding.

$ $ $

The bulls are directing attention to the fact that Union Pacific is in as good a shape as any other system in the United States. It has but little financing to do, has plenty of cash, the physical condition is sound, it did not ask that freight rates be raised, and is disposing in a broad and aggressive policy, in spite of anything the future may have in store for the railroads generally.

$ $ $

Chesapeake & Ohio is said to be planning some new financing. There is no pressure on the part of the management to borrow, and the sense of the situation will retire them by making the recent mortgage and more comprehensive. It will take some time, however, to work out this plan.

FILMS SHOW AUTO MAKING

By J. C. KERRIGON.

The exceptional methods used in manufacturing E-M-F "30" and the Flanders "20" motor cars is to be demonstrated by the E-M-F Boston Company at the Hotel Lenox, at noon next Tuesday. The home office has prepared several thousand feet of moving picture films, which will be taken for exhibit in the Boston room. This moving picture exhibit is said to be one of the most interesting and most complete that has ever been made for industrial purposes.

Beginning with huge piles of crude material, the pictures show the various processes of this material. Great automatic machines, foundries, trip hammers, assembling, testing, racing, hill climbing, and, in fact, every stage in the manufacture and use of the E-M-F and Flanders cars are vividly depicted. During the presentation of the pictures on the screen, a member of the sales force delivers an interesting lecture.

The company intends that each dealer, no matter where situated, shall know just how the cars are manufactured. There are many dealers located in remote sections who have never had an opportunity to see an automobile made and the realistic moving pictures give them the opportunity to witness the manufacture of the cars. When over the films have been shown much enthusiasm has been created, and the E-M-F "30" and Flanders "20" to prospective purchasers.

Sales Manager Twyman, of the home office, and Mr. Kingston, of the Boston branch, have made arrangements for this exhibit in Boston, as it is expected that the majority of E-M-F dealers in Massachusetts.

President Ludlum of the Autocar Company of Philadelphia, spent yesterday in Boston looking over the field. He says: "Boston is a commercial vehicle zone, Mr. Ludlum said. "We are conducting a demonstration here to-day that all the time. The best contest that we, or anyone else, has ever had is the one which has been held for its aim and purpose the giving of the very best service to our customers.

"We believe a contest of that character is of the very greatest importance to suits where results are most desired and advantageous. The value of the motor truck for commercial purposes, is illustrated by conversation he heard in a prominent business men in a city not very far from Boston.

The conversation drifted towards motor trucks and their cost. One merchant said to the other: 'What does it cost you to run your motor truck a day? The answer was $10.' 'What does it cost you to keep your motor truck standing in the garage all day?' was the next query, quick as a flash. '$45 in profits.'

The profits which such has reduced the use of men or trucks to a science and business proposition. Few people only know what it cost him to use his truck per day, but he does know what it cost him to keep that same motor truck like a day. It is such experiences as these that make the future for the motor truck full of bright prospects."

Chairman Stevens of the Touring committee of the Boston Automobile Association, will shortly announce the final arrangements for the annual run of the club on June 17 and 18. The intention is to have the run in the form of a visiting contest to the Cape, and there is no question but what it will be patronized by the members of the organization.

CLAIMS PART OF $6,000,000 ESTATE

RUTLAND, Vt., March 25.—Mrs. David J. Carpenter, wife of a yard foreman on the Rutland railroad, believes she is heir to part of a $6,000,000 estate left by Madame Hust at Paris, France, and has taken legal proceedings to establish her claim. She recently read in a Montreal paper that the heirs of Mme. Hust were being sought in this country and believes she is one.

BOSTON AMERICAN

80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, MARCH 25, 1911

How the Elevated Railroad Is Trying to "Holdup" the Public—It Is Always Wise to Be Reasonable

The legislative Committee on Street Railways recently considered the question whether the Boston Elevated Railroad should be authorized to consolidate with the West End Street Railway and to increase the dividends on the West End Street Railway stock from seven to eight per cent.

During the hearing a member of the committee, on learning that the West End was willing to receive an increase and the Boston Elevated was willing to pay it, asked:

"WHAT, THEN, IS THE QUESTION BEFORE US?"

There is a wealth of significance in that question asked by Mr. Kilpatrick of Lowell.

It was probably an honest question, but it shows a strange idea of the relation between the public and the public service corporation. To authorize the Boston Elevated Railroad to increase its payment upon the West End Street Railway stock from seven to eight per cent. is to give the stockholders of the West End Street Railway $125,000 a year more than they ought to have; that is to say, it would be a downright unwarranted gift of $3,000,000 at the expense of the public.

For a moment the gentleman who asked that question must have forgotten that a burden which increases the expense of the Boston Elevated Railroad and does not profit the public is a direct charge upon the public.

The Boston Elevated Railroad WILL NOT pay the extra charge of $125,000 a year. THE PUBLIC will pay it.

The Elevated Railroad will pay its 6 per cent. dividend whether this extra burden is added to the cost of doing business or whether it is not added, and the public will pay in the decrease of the quality of service, or in a failure to increase the quality of the service.

Last year, when this same proposal came before the Legislature, Mayor Fitzgerald pointed out that the cost of this proposed gift to dead capital is equal to the cost of a subway to South Boston.

Mr. Fitzgerald called it a "holdup" then, and it is as much a "holdup" to-day.

While men and women are crowded indecently into cars which have no seats for them, the public has a RIGHT TO INSIST AND WILL INSIST that every dollar which the Elevated earns above a reasonable dividend shall be devoted to the giving of better service.

We have not half subways enough yet to give us REAL RAPID TRANSIT. While there is one subway still to be built, in a complete system of subways, the Boston Elevated Railroad has no right to agree to make any unnecessary gifts to any corporation whatever, and it is most extraordinary that the Elevated Railroad should be willing to give this unreasonable largess at the very time that it is asking the public to reduce the rent it is paying for the use of the subways, because it is TOO POOR to continue these payments and undertake to rent any more subways.

If the Boston Elevated Railroad has $125,000 a year to spare, it can apply that money to giving better service or to the rent of new subways without complaining of its small profits.

The Boston Elevated Railroad pretends to consider this question a pure matter of business, or trading between two private corporations in which the public are not interested.

Mr. Snow, representing the Boston Elevated, compared this situation to the situation of the owner of a department store who wanted to extend his business into the store of his neighbor. The neighbor wanted a higher price than the other thought was fair, but he needed the store very much and he figured that he could pay even that price and still make money.

But the situation between these two public service corporations is entirely different. The Boston Elevated and the West End ARE NOT PRIVATE CORPORATIONS and the public is VERY MUCH interested. Furthermore, the public have RIGHTS in the premises.

The public can revoke the charter and revoke the locations of the West End Street Railroad if it fails to act reasonably in this situation, or, in its discretion, the public can purchase the West End Street Railroad and lease it to the Boston Elevated upon proper terms and make money.

It is well known by those who are familiar with the conditions that the State could buy the West End, lease it to the Elevated Railroad for the same rental it is now paying, and make from $200,000 to $700,000 a year by the operation.

The stockholders of the West End Street Railroad surrendered all participation in the development of our transportation facilities when they made the present lease to the Boston Elevated Railroad.

They were satisfied with the dividends which the Elevated then agreed to pay them and were willing to make the lease run for ninety-nine years, or as nearly perpetual as the law will permit a lease to be.

It was the interference of the public which prevented so long a lease from being made. These gentlemen of the West End Street Railway Company appreciate that the operation of two separate systems of railways in Boston would be intolerable to-day and they are presuming upon the fact to extort from the Boston Elevated and the public a gratuity of $3,000,000 for their assent to a consolidation.

It is a foolish piece of ATTEMPTED EXTORTION to which the Chairman of the Railroad Commissioners, the Chairman of the Rapid Transit Commissioners, the Public Franchise League and the Boston Chamber of Commerce are all opposed.

The West End stockholders by their unreasonable demands are inviting the State to invoke its powers either to WIPE OUT THEIR CHARTER AND LOCATIONS OR TO ACQUIRE THEIR PROPERTY.

Let us hear no more of it!

THE Javanese village, as shown at the world's expositions in Chicago and St. Louis, gave an actual picture of thousands of the villages scattered all over the tropical island of Java.

But all the native people of Java do not live in bamboo huts, and while the vast majority are clothed only from the waist to the knees (a most comfortable style of dress for that climate), there are classes and grades in Javanese society as elsewhere, and each is easily distinguished by its attire.

The high class women of Java wear a garment—the hand-made batistic cloth, which requires four months in making and is worn as a skirt, under a jacket or coat, and usually without shoes or stockings.

Sandals are sometimes worn on the street. A sash of the same hand-painted and much-waxed and dyed material, of a different design from the skirt, is used in various ways, from the shoulder to the hip, above the waist, with long pendant ends, or closely belted above the breast and below the hips, and always artistic in effect.

The Javanese people have a great love for music, and their many native instruments give a large variety of sounds.

A Javanese Orchestra

The anchene is an orchestra of nine bamboo instruments, and requires five performers, four of the musicians playing six instruments with each hand. The playing consists in shaking each instrument in time and tune with the others, and it produces most appealing harmonies.

The xylophone is of similar construction, and is played by one person with a pair of wooden "buffs" or hammers.

The favorite orchestra of the sultans is called the gamelon, and is made of metal. There are sometimes sixty musicians in this orchestra.

The love of music in Java was strongly proven to me one evening in Solo. We were conducted by a resident of influence to the grounds of the "Lord High Chancellor," who stands next in position to the Sultan.

Entertained with Music

The gardens are spacious and the buildings artistic and palatial. In the main building we were enabled to see the Chancellor sitting out on a wide balcony amidst palms and ferns and flowers looking over some papers of state, our escort said.

From within the castle floated out exquisite strains of native music, and peridically a woman's voice added its strains. A cultured voice, but with the cultivation of Java teachers, who love the nasal shrill tones of the human voice in song.

When the orchestra finished another band of native musicians began playing the European instruments and airs—three violins, a 'cello and all the entire orchestra in truth which one would find in a well-equipped modern theatre.

For more than an hour and a half these two bands of musicians alternated, and all for the benefit of the Chancellor alone, who sits three evenings of each week and is entertained in this manner. He is a native Javanese and has never been away from the island.

The most remarkable house for originality of idea and artistic execution of every detail we ever had the pleasure of seeing was one of the memorable sights of Solo, Java.

The owner and creator of the house is the architect of the Sultan of Solo.

He seems to possess a combination of the genius of Michelangelo and Stanford White; yet this man was born, bred and educated in Java and has never been in any other land.

Unique Idea of Decoration

There was simplicity of design, dignity appropriateness and classic beauty in every line of this house; the spacious court, the graceful arch, the large reception room—open on two sides to the court. The other two sides opened into a series of surprising rooms.

At first glance one saw simply a medium sized chamber furnished in teakwood chairs and tables, with pictures and brackets on the wall. But a second look revealed the fact that every object was fashioned of carpenters' and architects' tools. Saws, hammers, wrenches, files, lathes, pincers, planes, rules and every conceivable article ever used by house builders or creators were shaped into the most symmetrical and solid and comfortable furniture and into the most artistic picture frames and brackets and coat-hangers.

Another room revealed itself, after a few moments' investigation, as furnished and adorned to and by musical instruments of every description, all serving purposes of utility and beauty as tables, chairs, screens, footstools, picture frames, all made of the precious teakwood so plentiful in Java, and the only wood found defies the ravages of the destructive white ant which infests Java.

Has a Gifted Family

The sons and daughters of this artist architect are all gifted with musical talent and delightful recitals of classic music are given by them in their home for the pleasure of their friends.

One daughter composes under peculiar trance conditions very wonderful music, which has been sent to European critics and excited wonder and admiration.

The eldest son of the architect is the only member of the family who has ever seen any land but Java.

Just returned from three months in Europe, the young man says: "I enjoyed everything, Paris most of all; but nowhere say any spot or place so delightful as my own home."

And his visitors were obliged to confess that they, in all their wanderings over the world, had seen few homes to compare in comfort, exquisite taste and artistic beauty with this house on the little island of Java.

He Drew on Sight

By IRWIN THOMAS

JAY JENKINS was a banker bold,
Shrewd as a fox and fond of gold.
Paper he bought and some he sold,
And shaved it, too, so I've been told.

Now Jay was broke to city ways,
For there he'd spent most all his days;
Still to travel it often pays,
Even when one goes home and stays.

Jay went out to the woolly West,
Put up a bank so he could test
The kind of credit that was best,
Pulled down his whiskers and his vest.

Hailed with joy by the gladsome folk—opening a bank was quite a joke
In a dying town where all were broke, and Jay of fortune was a stroke.

All great financiers don't live East,
Alkali Ike, to say the least;
I know persons call him a beast;
Ran up his mining stock like yeast.

This Western guy, wise in finance,
Sized up Jay as a happy chance,
Cashed a note; while in a trance
Jay dug the coin from out his pants.

This borrowing gent went out to drown
His joy before the sun went down.
He blew the coin, the very last crown,
Then for a change he blew the town.

So when the note was coming due Jay sent him a line, "I'll draw on you
At sight," he wrote, as bankers do. And then the trouble began to brew.

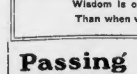
Threaten to draw on a man at sight,
And then it's up to him to fight.
The other knowing he was right
Went for Jay before it was night.

He got him just outside the door,
Gave a yell, and then shot some more.
They counted the shots up to four,
Jay was plugged clear through the core.

The jury sat and the case was tried,
But the fact was clear, none could hide,
The banker offended the other side,
And this is what they did decide:

When one writes you he'll draw at sight it's up to you to start the fight;
You got the goods, are in the right, so think of this when next you write.

They buried Jay beside the hill,
A wooden slab made from his till
Inscription bears that fills the bill,
"Did not understand and never will."



Wisdom is oftentimes nearer when we stoop
Than when we soar. WORDSWORTH.

Passing Along the Knocks

Tom Powers has a cartoon series in the big City Life Section of the Sunday AMERICAN to-morrow that will hit about everybody where they live. It is about knocking and knockers and it is very, very funny.
